CRISIS GRAVEST IN 20 YEARS, DALADIER WARNS FRANCE; DIXIE DIALECT DISAPPEARS AT ANDREWS TEXTILE HEARING

CIO PAINTS TRAGIC PICTURE OF UNION MEN'S SUFFERING

High Cost of Living, Menace of Low Wages in South Cited in Plea for 32 1-2 Cents an Hour.

By LAMAR Q. BALL.

The southern dialect disappeared from the script of the textile minimum wage hearing yesterday as the CIO stage managers found it necessary for the day to interrupt their efforts to enshrine themselves under the aura of a wholesome Civil War ancestry of strong Confederate persuasion.

With their privileges of the floor drawing swiftly to a close, leaders of the Textile Workers' Union of America sent to the witness stand labor organizers from the north to paint a tragic picture of how their northern unions are suffering because textile mills are moving south where the response to organization is not so brisk, or profitable.

Warns of Danger.

Joseph W. Knapisch, vice president of the United Textile Workers of America, who operates as an organizer out of New Jersey, frankly told Wage-Hour Administrator Elmer F. Andrews:

"If this movement to the south on the part of the mills continues, I am afraid of the disintegration of the entire textile mill industry. Help must come from somewhere."

Knapisch pictured the collapse of his union organizing in the north, where wages had been 66 cents an hour, with the movement of the mills to the south, where he said 40 cents an hour is really insufficient pay but 32 1-2 cents an hour "will be a step in the right direction."

Cities Rise in Living Cost.

Earlier in the day, Emil Rieve, general president of the Textile Workers' Union of America, a Philadelphian, read a long prepared statement in which he said:

"The cost of living of the workers in this country has risen by 14 per cent since the adoption of the 30-cent minimum wage prescribed for the south by the NRA. In and of itself, the rise in the cost of living justifies a southern minimum wage of not less than 34.2 cents per hour."

Attorney John Abt. of the TWUA, a CIO organization, who managed the appearance of witnesses before Administrator Andrews yesterday interspersed the more urgent testimony of Knapisch and Rieve with a few subtle southern touches in the presentation of such witnesses as:

1. President Frank P. Graham.

EQUAL RELIEF PAY FOR SOUTH IN BILL

Russell Succeeds in Attaching the Amendment in Committee Session.

By GLADSTONE WILLIAMS.

WASHINGTON, June 27.—After a spirited battle in the appropriations committee of which he is a member, Senator Russell, of Georgia, today succeeded in attaching to the new $1,735,000,000 relief bill an amendment equalizing the pay of southern relief workers with those on WPA rolls in other sections of the country.

Final adoption of the amendment will open the way for millions of additional dollars to go into the pockets of WPA workers in Georgia and other southern states, where the present scale of relief wages is considerably lower than in eastern industrial centers.

GEORGIAN CAUGHT 2 SHELLS IN WAR; MEDAL PROPOSED

By GLADSTONE WILLIAMS.

Staff Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, June 27.—This is the story of a Georgia seaman who stopped a shell during the World War and still lives to tell the tale.

As a result of his heroism, Representative B. Frank Whelchel, of Gainesville, has introduced a bill in the house awarding the distinguished service medal to Joseph Ernest Shafer, of Lilburn, Ga.

As a seaman of the second class, Shafer was serving with the gun crew of the U. S. S. Henry R. Mallory in October, 1917, when he sustained severe injuries in attempting to catch two falling shells from a height of 30 feet, in an effort to save the lives of others.

Young Shafer had made one trip abroad with the Henry R. Mallory. Loaded with troops for "over there" on October 17, 1917.

$500,000 Declared Obtained Illegally by Missing University Head.

BATON ROUGE, La., June 27.—

(AP)—Governor Earl K. Long's first day in office was complicated tonight by sharply contradictory statements over whether banks or Louisiana State University must foot the bill for $500,000 allegedly obtained illegally by Dr. James Monroe Smith, fugitive former university head.

Soon after Long pledged a "square-deal" and a "thorough reckoning" for all wrongdoing, the National Bank of Commerce in New Orleans took issue with the

Congress Prodded To Pass Bills by Midnight Friday

New Deal Leaders Push Major Legislation, Including Relief, in Effort To Get Measures Enacted Before Close of Fiscal Year.

By RICHARD L. TURNER.

WASHINGTON, June 27.—(AP)

A few barbed remarks from Hyde Park stirred up anger in the senate wing of the capitol today as worried administration leaders struggled to push major legislation through congress by midnight Friday, the close of the fiscal year.

From his mansion on the Hudson, President Roosevelt lashed out at those who participated in yesterday's coup which stripped the administration monetary bill of the President's power to devalue the dollar and set a fixed and increased price for government purchases of newly mined domestic silver.

This measure, involving the life of the $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund, was but one of several which administration men said must be passed by midnight Friday, the close of the fiscal year, if confusion in several downtown departments and possibly much em-

3 MILLION TROOPS ACROSS BORDERS, NATION IS TOLD

Premier Suddenly Adjourns Parliament; Europe Apprehensive, Eyes Tension in Far East.

By The Associated Press.

Europe, observing the 25th anniversary of the Sarajevo shots which touched off the World War, was apprehensive today that a European crisis might develop into a new war, but meanwhile paid close attention to continued tension in the Far East.

Premier Daladier suddenly adjourned the French parliament for the summer with a warning that 3,000,000 foreign soldiers faced French frontiers in the gravest international crisis in twenty years.

Apparently the premier meant the troops of Germany, Italy and Spain.

Adjournment left him free to rule France by decree until November.

Yugoslav Army Parades.

Long lines of troops and rumbling tanks, part of Yugoslavia's growing armaments, moved through Sarajevo streets after army maneuvers and added a significant touch to the town's anniversary.

But while memories of an older war stirred Europe, a fresher picture arose in the Far East, where Japanese dispatches reported a sweeping victory over Soviet Russian air forces in Outer Mongolia.

They said 120 Soviet planes were destroyed in two spectacular battles near the border of Japanese-dominated Manchoukuo, where sporadic fighting has been in progress since May 11.

Soviet dispatches, however, said seven Japanese planes were shot down and only six Soviet-Mongol planes were missing.

British Hopes Rise.

British hopes rose for a quick settlement of the Tientsin crisis as the Japanese blockade of the British and French concessions entered its third week. Optimism was stimulated by Tokyo reports that negotiations were under way and by indications from Japanese military authorities at Tientsin that strict search of Britons at barricades was being relaxed a little.

The Japanese navy warned the United States and other powers to remove their vessels from Foochow and Wenchow, southern Chinese ports against which new Japanese offensives are aimed.

France promptly rejected the order and British officials declared Japan would be responsible for

3 PRISONERS USING WOMAN HOSTAGE ARE SHOT IN BREAK

Guards, State Police Foil Attempt To Escape After Felons Seize Visiting Welfare Worker in Pen.

MICHIGAN CITY, Ind., June 27.

(AP)—Three desperate felons armed with butcher knives seized a woman welfare worker in Indiana State prison today and threatened to kill her unless they were given guns and freedom, but sharp-shooting guards and state police shot them down as they held a parley with the prison warden.

The three prisoners were wounded severely. A fourth prisoner, forced into their scheme; the woman hostage and the warden's secretary suffered slight wounds, and a prison guard who sought to interfere with the convicts' plans was slashed in the neck with a knife.

Welfare Worker Seized.

Mrs. Ruth Joiner, 29, of Crawfordsville, Ind., member of a party of eight welfare workers being escorted through the prison, was the woman seized.

As the party passed through the prison hospital, Mrs. Joiner was grabbed by Richard Sweet, 26, Alphonse Skuszwich, 20, and Earl Niverson, 30. The trio hustled her into the office of Dr. Peter Weeks, prison physician.

Leroy Hunt, 34, trusty working as a hospital attendant, and Joseph Piotrowski, 37, guard, sought to rescue Mrs. Joiner. The convicts stabbed Piotrowski in the neck and herded Hunt into the doctor's office with Mrs. Joiner.

Over Week's telephone, the convicts called Warden Alfred Dowd. "Give us guns and a get-away car within 10 minutes, or we'll kill the woman," the warden quoted them as saying.

Call State Police.

Dowd called for state police assistance, summoned extra guards to duty and went to the hospital.

Through the door of the doctor's office, against which the convicts had erected a barricade, the warden shouted to the men and told them he would take up their demands with the Governor's office.

He told them Mrs. Joiner was the mother of a 3-year-old daughter, pleaded with them to remember their mothers and asked them to release their hostage unharmed.

Sweet shouted back:

"Nothing doing to that. I'm going out of here first some time, and I might as well go now."

The warden retired, convinced

Mrs. Joiner would come to no immediate harm, and told the convicts he would return soon with an answer.

He left, planned a surprise attack and then returned.

Guards outside were instructed to quietly hoist ladders to two outside windows in Week's office.

Plank Saves Man in Fall Of 6 Floors

2x8 Propped 8 Feet From Ground Breaks Tumble; No Bones Broken.

A scantling measuring eight inches wide and two inches thick—stretched across two carpenters' horses eight feet from the ground—saved the life of a workman yesterday by breaking his fall of about 90 feet from a scaffolding near the sixth-floor level of the new state office building under construction opposite the Mitchell street side of the capitol.

Although stunned, the injured man, E. W. Griffin, 36, job superintendent for the Nashville Stone Setting Company, was able to walk to an ambulance which hurried him to Georgia Baptist hospital.

Physicians discovered from X-ray photographs that no bones had been broken. They said he was suffering from severe bruises, abrasions and shock, but would recover.

Griffin, whose home is in Nashville but who is living with his wife at 231 Georgia avenue during construction of the building, was declared to have been standing on the scaffold in the hot sun inspecting recently installed stonework.

No witnesses could be found to describe the exact reason for his fall, and the injured man was said by attendants not to be able to discuss the accident.

MONETARY POLICY CHANGE PLAYS HOB WITH SILVER, GOLD

Reverberations in Markets of World Follow Surprise Vote; Solons Quick To Retort.

By The Associated Press.

An astonishing coup in the United States senate, which played hob with President Roosevelt's monetary policies, sent reverberations through world markets yesterday and led to some angry finger-pointing between Hyde Park and Washington's Capitol Hill.

On Monday, groups of "silver senators" and currency expansionists from the west, and "hard money" Republicans from the east, coalesced suddenly and unexpectedly. They cut out of a pending monetary bill the President's power to slice more gold out of the dollar. They voted to increase the Treasury's price for domestic silver, newly mined, from 64.64 cents an ounce to 77.57 cents. They voted to end all purchases of foreign silver.

Thus the silver senators, bent on doing something for the western silver industry, and the Republicans, determined to end a devaluation process which they contended led to uncertainty and therefore hampered business, helped each other toward the desired goals.

Hyde Park Reaction Swift.

The reaction from Hyde Park, where President Roosevelt was staying temporarily, was swift. Sometimes poking barbed fun at the unusual combination of senators and sometimes speaking in tones of angry earnestness, he told reporters yesterday that the senate's action threatened to undermine national defense and return money control to Wall Street speculators and international bankers.

In the old days, he said, international currencies used to jump up and down like a jack-in-the-box. The economic conditions of nations were disturbed. The power to devalue the dollar, he indicated, meant the power to curb such gyrations.

Loss of such power, he said, would harm the nation's foreign trade, and that meant that the country, being weakened, would be in a less favorable position for national defense.

For 5 1-2 years, Mr. Roosevelt said, we have had the right to devalue the dollar from 59 to 50 per cent of its former gold content. We haven't used it, and we have had no intention of using it unless other principal nations started taking cracks at us as they did in 1930 and 1931—when it took us three years to recover.

As long as we have the right to

JURY DEFERS VOTE ON SPECIAL LEVY TO FINANCE RELIEF

Measure Will Be Studied at Special Session Tomorrow; Courts Get Recommendations Friday.

Fulton county grand jury yesterday deferred a vote on what rule it will recommend as a special tax levy for relief purposes, voting to take the matter up in a special session set for 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The recommendation will be contained in the presentments which the group will make to the courts when it adjourns Friday for the May-June term of court.

A series of hearings have been held during the two-month term with county commissioners, members of the Fulton County Board of Public Welfare, county physicians and others appearing before a special subcommittee of the grand jury, headed by Fred J. Cooledge Jr.

On the recommendation hinges the amount of money which will be available for relief purposes. The March-April grand jury recommended a 2 1/4-mill levy, while the welfare board insists that 3 mills is the least amount "on which we can do a creditable job."

Until May 1, commissioners paid to the welfare board $48,500 a month, representing the yield from a 3-mill levy. When the March-April grand jury recommended the 2 1/4 mills, relief appropriations were trimmed accordingly, to $36,365 a month.

If the 2 1/4-mill levy is concurred in by the outgoing grand jury, it will become effective for the year, and the welfare board will face a further slash in its receipts to absorb the difference between the $48,500 and the $36,365 figure for the first three months of the year. Commissioners taking the position that it cannot make any appropriations for relief in excess of the amount authorized.

TEXTILE INDUSTRY WARNED OF DANGER of the University of North Carolina, who accepting his cue from Professor Herman Clarence Nixon, star witness Monday, let it be known from the start that he was not an economist or a textile expert or any other kind of expert. Dr. Graham merely urged higher wages for the south to promote better living.

2. B. F. Thomas, a mill worker of Douglasville, Ga., who described his problems of earnings a living.

3. Paul Fowler, of Chattahoochee, Ga., who discussed his difficulties as a mill hand.

4. Roy Lawrence, of Atlanta, a member of Industries Committee No. 1 and a general vice president of the TWUA in the south, who described living conditions of the mill families in the south.

5. Witherspoon Dodge, former Atlanta pastor, now an organizer for the CIO.

These five brought the southern dialect into play for a while during yesterday's session but the star witnesses for the day were the labor organizers from the north who viewed the minimum wage problems from the difficulties of their jobs.

With the presentation of yesterday's witnesses, the prosecution's case ended in the hearing. Today, the mill owners will begin presentation of their side of the area.

Governors Delay Appearance. Earlier plans had called for the appearance today of three southern governors, Dixon, of Alabama; White, of Mississippi, and Bailey, of Arkansas, but word to Administrator Andrews yesterday caused announcement that their appearances will be delayed until Friday.

From Montgomery, Ala., yesterday Governor Dixon announced that he would appear Friday.

"I propose to support the minority recommendation of the nation-

Textile Union Chief Tells of Workers' Problems at Wage Hearing

The boss of all the textile unions discloses the problems of his followers. Emil Rieve (left), of Philadelphia, general president of the Textile Workers' Union of America, is shown being questioned yesterday morning by Tyre Taylor, attorney for the American Cotton Manufacturers' Association, after Rieve had read a long prepared statement in which he had difficulty in pronouncing most of the words he had set down for himself, and informed his audience "I am not a Sudgermer!" The five men at the prosecution table, immediately facing the camera, are Schlessinger, Pitts, Abt, Barkin and Kapisch.

al wage-hour advisory council, which is the southern proposal."

He explained that the minority recommended a 30-cent minimum wage, slated to become effective in October, be used for one-year "to see what effect it has on the industry."

Seek Favorable Link. Yesterday's slight disruption in CIO efforts to link itself with supporters of old, southern origin became evident as part of its campaign to establish favorable connections with southern workers.

Harry Riemer, correspondent for the Daily News Record, a New York trade newspaper, who has followed these hearings since their beginning in Washington early this month, had this to say in his story yesterday:

"In its opening guns at the textile minimum wage hearing at the Ansley hotel here, the majority again played up that phase of its strategy which had to do with featuring witnesses who are real southerners, meaning men whose ancestry in the south goes back for many years."

Emphasize Southern Ancestry. "At Washington last week, W. A. Moorehead, of Joanna Mills, Goldsboro, S. C., emphasized that the southern blood in his veins goes back at least four generations. Hyman Battles, of Rocky Mount, N. C., was another undisputed southerner upon whose testimony the majority placed considerable weight."

"This morning, it was a southern economist, Professor Nixon, of the University of Oklahoma, who gave direct examination strongly in behalf of the recommended minimum wage. So that there could be no question as to his lineage, Professor Nixon said he came from a family of Confederate veterans."

Graham Outlines Views. Yesterday, President Graham, of the University of North Carolina, was introduced as the star witness of the day and in his opening remarks he stressed:

"I appear as a southerner with both an historical and human interest in social legislation, of which the Fair Labor Standards Act is a most recent part."

Then as he discussed opposition to the proposed minimum wage, he emphasized:

"This opposition, instead of being a matter of southern backwardness or human cussedness, is a part of a social process not confined to southerners, is older than the textile south and is a part of an historic process as old as Democratic civil legislation itself."

Audience Amused. General President Rieve, of the TWUA, looked up sharply from his prepared statement, surveyed his audience at one point of his address and then said:

"I am not a sudgermer."

His Philadelphia accent made his audience laugh.

"I therefore hesitate," he said, "to dilate on the problems of the south. But the problem of low-wage industry with its concomitants of overcompetition, precarious profit margins and a high rate of mortality is not confined to the south. A problem almost identical with that of the southern cotton textile industry today was met and solved by the garment industry of the north."

He explained the garment industry, once composed of numbers of sweat shops, straightened itself out by union organization.

Makes Plea for Unions. Knapisch, the vice president of the TWUA, is also national president of the Silk and Rayon Dyers, Finishers, Printers and Bleachers Federation of America, appealing in behalf of the unions of the north, said:

"In the organized areas, plants are beginning to close because of competitive conditions coming out of the south."

He declared that northern mill owners are moving into the south where they will have no labor troubles.

"This," he said, "is how the south is being used by northern capital to derive greater profit for itself."

Cites Competition. He told of heavily-capitalized plants in the silk and rayon industry in the north which have been virtually closed down because of their inability to stand against competition from the southern mills.

One $16,000,000 plant in the north, he said, is now practically idle, "working on a shoestring," as he termed it, because of this competition.

"If more mills move south and prices continue to be quoted at far below cost, then I am afraid for the disintegration of the entire industry all over the country," he said.

Knapisch's entire testimony emphasized again and again what he classed as "unfair competitive conditions existing today."

Organizing Difficult. His efforts to organize labor under these conditions, he pointed out, are becoming increasingly difficult every day.

"There is one town (in the south) where they won't let me come within 10 miles of the plant," he said.

Dr. Graham's argument in favor of higher wages for the textile workers was based on the theory that higher wages mean higher purchasing power and, consequently, any move in this direction will tend to bring the return of general prosperity. He said his interest in higher wages for the workmen was not limited to the textile worker, but he believed that this was just one step in the right direction. He hoped higher wages would come to all indus-

DELTA LINES SEEK SEA ISLAND ROUTE

Would Provide First Direct Link From Atlanta to Coastal City.

Delta Air Lines will file an immediate application with the Civil Aeronautics Authority for permission to operate between Atlanta and Sea Island by way of Augusta and Savannah, it was announced yesterday.

The announcement was made by C. E. Woolman, vice president and general manager of the company, at the conclusion of a survey flight along the proposed route with several city officials taking part.

Planned for the purpose of inspecting facilities along the way, Woolman said the trip was satisfactory in every respect and that his company would be ready to begin operations as soon as the necessary certificate of authority is issued.

The new line would parallel the company's present route as far as Augusta, but would provide the first direct air connections between Atlanta and the two coastal cities. One round-trip a day is planned to inaugurate the service, with an eventual increase to two round-trips a day.

tries, then "everyone would have a better chance."

Notes Wealth In North.

Dr. Graham explained that he is a member of President Roosevelt's committee on education, supporting Senator Pat Harrison's bill, presented to congress, intended to equalize the great educational overload problem of the United States.

"The country's trouble," said Dr. Graham, "is that all the wealth is in one part of the country (the north) and all the children are in another (the south). The bill seeks to equalize this."

"It is not a matter of charity to the south; it is a matter of justice to the children."

When he hearing resumes today, K. P. Lewis, president of the American Cotton Manufacturers' Association, will lead off as first witness in behalf of the mill owners.

Of this number, 689 were absorbed by private industry and the remainder were placed either in government service or on public work projects. Both total and private placements made by the bureau during May set new high records. Total placements were reported at 7,897, of which 4,637 were in private employment. The report showed that 2,177 were placed in regular employment and 2,393 were given temporary jobs.

Tips Given on How To Avoid Burglaries

Police Official Gives Vacation-Bound Atlantans Advice on Keeping Their Homes Safe.

By LUKE GREEN.

Vacation-minded Atlantans who are planning excursions to the beach or the mountains might well take a few precautions against burglaries before they jump into the family limo and speed away. At least, that's the opinion of Atlanta police who have found most persons take the attitude that burglars break into other people's homes—certainly not theirs. As a result they trundle off to their favorite vacation spot and leave the house so wide open the enterprising burglar gets his prize ruffled because it's so easy to break in.

Once upon the road, however, the worries begin. Here's usually what happens:

About 50 or 75 miles from home—too far away to turn back—the wife suddenly remembers she forgot to lock the kitchen window and turns restlessly to her husband in the hope he might have locked it (something he never did before).

The husband scowls and mutters something about her always waiting until she gets in the car to think of those things, and drives home his point by stepping on the accelerator. During the whole vacation, however, the wife continues to think about the unlocked window and even lies awake at night.

Thus it goes . . . There's really no use in spoiling your vacation with worry if you take a few tips from the police. Lieutenant C. F. Allen, who has had 30 years' experience on the Atlanta force, took time out to explain a few of them. Here they are:

1. Always fasten the screens as well as the windows. The difficulty of prying open a screen and a window sometimes discourages a burglar.

2. Call the police and tell them how long you are going to be gone and whom to notify in case of emergency. If the policemen on a beat know that a family is away, they will give particular attention to that home.

3. Don't pull all the shades down. This tips off the potential burglar that the family is away.

4. Don't leave the door key in a flower pot, over the door or under the door mat. A burglar always looks for a key first.

5. Don't leave valuables in the house. If they are left be sure to hide them. Thieves usually can get into a house if they have the time.

6. Never leave a note announcing where you have gone and when you will be back. It's an invitation to the marauding gentry.

He has some advice, too, for stay-at-homes, such as:

If possible, keep a watchdog in the back yard. This will force the thief to enter from the front and usually he isn't so anxious about a polite entrance.

If you are at home and entertaining, don't leave coats and wraps in the front part of the house while you are having dinner in the rear.

Don't permit strangers who claim to be gas inspectors or similar officials to enter your home without showing their badges or credentials.

Don't give information to strangers about your neighbors.

When going out to a movie or for a short visit at night leave a light burning in some part of the house.

Lieutenant Allen, whose house has never been broken into, said his front door was kept locked day and night. He added that he always managed to keep two good watchdogs.

The lieutenant also offered another suggestion. When the average person finds a burglar in his house, the first thing he does is to chase the marauder away and then call the police. Allen said it would be much better to reverse this procedure, since police cars usually can reach the scene of a crime in from one to four minutes after the call comes in. Last year the average for all calls was two and one-half minutes.

There is no particular part of the night when most burglaries occur, Allen said. However, he explained that a great number take place in the early part of the night when all members of the family are out.

Most burglaries, he said, are in the fashionable sections of the city.

Miss Lillian Broward, of 2530 Parkside drive, demonstrates a precaution you should take against burglars if you are planning to leave home on a vacation. Lock the windows but don't pull down the shades. Atlanta police say it's a good precaution.

FREEDOM OF PRESS CALLED ESSENTIAL

Stahlman Stresses Importance of Unrestricted Newspapers to Advertisers.

OAKLAND, Cal., June 27.—(AP) The vital connection between free press and free enterprise was stressed by James G. Stahlman, Nashville, Tenn., publisher in an address today before the Pacific Advertising Clubs' Association convention.

"You advertisers and representatives of business should be greatly concerned about the preservation of a free press in America," said Stahlman, past president of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association.

Declaring "there can be no free enterprise without a free press," the speaker told delegates "it is your obligation to help keep the press free by refraining from any effort to fetter it."

Stahlman said "Newspapers have sold and will continue to sell more merchandise than any other medium yet devised."

"The fact that the daily newspapers of America can have a circulation today of more than 42,000,000 copies—an all-time high—is the best answer to loose assertions that reader interest in the press is on the decline."

A free press, Stahlman said, means a publisher's "obligation and responsibility to keep the people informed through truthful and unbiased presentation of the news; it does not mean his right to publish whatever the publisher pleases, or to violate any laws."

W. L. MILLER TO SPEAK IN GREENSBORO TODAY

GREENSBORO, Ga., June 27.—(AP)—Georgians who prefer their June days spiced with politics looked to the meeting of tenth district county commissioners here tomorrow as a source of possible verbal fireworks.

W. Lint Miller, chairman of the state highway board, who is at odds with Governor Rivers over the latter's attempt to take control of the road department, has been asked to make the principal address.

Representative B. W. Boyd, of Greene county, and R. L. Vansant, Georgia farm security administrator, also have been invited to address the commissioners.

Bryan told Prince Olav that "in you are found those ancient and long-nurtured characteristics which your family have brought to such heights of excellence."

Worm Turns, Game Warden Arrests 2 Traffic Officers

The worm turned on two of the city's traffic officers yesterday. They got a ticket for law violation.

A-fishing went Motorcycle Cops H. T. Jenkins and E. H. Johnson. They got off for a day, got up early in the morning, and set out for Jackson lake. The only trouble was that they didn't have a license, and license bureaus don't stay open at all hours. Jenkins and Johnson tried at every stop along the way, but finally gave the necessary permit up as bad business and went fishing anyway.

About the time that Jenkins pulled a fish out of the lake, the game warden walked up and demanded to see their licenses. It is reported that the officers used every excuse they ever heard from the motorists they have arrested, but the warden was unconvinced and hauled them up to see Charles Elliott, superintendent of the State Wildlife Bureau.

Elliott, recalling that he had been "pulled in" for traffic violations, turned the other cheek by letting both officers off with nothing more severe than a lecture.

Oh yes, both officers stopped by the license bureau on their way out of the capitol and obtained their permits.

SPECIAL MEETING CALLED TO SETTLE BATTLE HILL ROW

County Commission Holds Session Today to Adjust Dispute on Treatment of Tubercular Patients.

Adjustment of the city-county controversy over treatment of county tubercular patients at Battle Hill sanatorium and promulgation of rules under which permits will be granted to sell liquor in unincorporated areas of Fulton county are major matters facing a special called meeting of the county commission at 10 o'clock this morning, Ed L. Almond, chairman, said last night.

Councilman Frank Wilson, chairman of city's council's hospital committee, several weeks ago issued an ultimatum to the county to pay the $1.58 daily cost of hospitalizing the county's 43 patients or the city would discharge 23, the number necessary to bring costs within the $12,200 set up by the county for the institution. He has notified commission members that he will be present at today's meeting to attempt to iron out the differences between the two governments.

At the same time, Dr. Charles R. Adams, who proposed that the county take over operation of Grady hospital, Battle Hill, the social disease hospital and the Albert Steiner Cancer clinic, will press the issue and insist that the matter be submitted to the voters of the county at the earliest possible date. Commissioners said they thought the Adams' suggestion a splendid one if the people of the county would favor a county-wide tax to defray the expense, estimated at approximately three mills.

Although 38 applications for establishment of liquor stores in unincorporated areas of the county were on Commission Clerk Frank R. Flinn's desk, it was not anticipated that the commission today will take any action on them. It, however, was said that forms for filing the petitions will be adopted and that general policies governing those to whom the permits will be granted will be decided upon.

Contracts with several Community Chest and other charity agencies also are slated for final approval.

BARBERS CALL MASS MEETING

Will Discuss Proposed Ordinance Fixing Minimum Prices, Maximum Hours.

A proposed city ordinance which would set minimum prices and maximum hours for all barber shops in the Atlanta trade area will be discussed at a mass meeting at 8 o'clock tonight at the Henry Grady hotel sponsored by local unions.

As tentatively drafted, the measure contains a referendum provision requiring approval of 70 per cent of those eligible to vote before it can be placed in effect. No actual figures for prices or wages have yet been set, pending an opinion from City Attorney Jack C. Savage on the legality of the proposal. There are indications, however, that city council will be asked to take some action provided sufficient support is shown at tonight's meeting.

Workers Cite Poor Living Conditions at Hearing

Textile Employees Tell Andrews of Debts, Low Pay; Describe Suffering on Meager Salaries.

By JACK SPALDING.

They mixed statistics with sobriety and cornbread and washed it down with buttermilk and molasses yesterday, when the CIO took the floor at the hearing conducted by Wage-Hour Administrator Elmer F. Andrews wound its repetitious way to a decision on the proposed 32 1/2-cent hourly minimum wage for textile workers.

Although the heavy southern aura that hung around the AFL's hearing the day before was twice dispelled by outland accents, the CIO managed to toss a few stray magnolia petals into the half-dug graves of the marginal mills that claim the pay hike will bankrupt them.

Placed on the witness stand were Paul Fowler and B. F. Thomas, two examples of the widely advertised docile Anglo-Saxon labor; Frank Graham, president of the University of North Carolina and leader of progressive southern thought; Dr. Witherspoon Dodge, former pastor of the Central Congregational Church of Atlanta, former professor at Oglethorpe University, and a southeastern CIO representative; and two other CIO union officials whose southern background was emphasized.

The dramatic Dr. Dodge lent color to the session's endless string of statistics with vivid stories of life as he found it in mill villages.

"I lost my faith in hell on rational grounds before I left my church," Dodge said, "but had it restored after a few months in mill villages. It makes me wonder if there isn't a hell hereafter to equalize things."

He spoke of his contacts with workers in their homes; of the poor meals, sometimes only two a day, and of mothers so starved they had no milk to nurse their babies.

"I have no desire to exaggerate," the former minister remarked, "but doubt if I could. One hundred miles from here I've known people who worked 55 hours a week for $7.50, and who lived in homes with running water only when it rained."

"There isn't much positive suffering among them. It's the negative condition of being without the things that make life enjoyable that is deplorable."

Ringmaster of the day was Sol Barkin, economist of the CIO.

The first genuine proof of the wage scale was B. F. Thomas, a twisted 48-year-old battery filler of a Douglasville mill.

Thomas and his wife were once weavers, but necessity and the stretch-out system made battery fillers of them. They have five children at home.

Questioned by Barkin, who anxiously sought and followed a "To-bacco Road" that wanders through many southern mill villages, Thomas talked of his house with a good roof and a stout floor, but with windows and doors that were hard to shut.

"Kind of cool in the winter," he said.

Around $800 Annually.

The two Thomases make a little more than $800 a year, spend about $11 a week for food, (dried beans, canned foods, buttermilk, meal, streak o' lean, and greens when they are cheap); pay $1.15 a week rent to the mill for their four-room house; about $1.50 a month for electricity, and have owed their doctor $20 for seven years. The fuel bill is about $45 a year, their clothing bill $2 a week. They owe their grocer approximately $100.

"Did you vote last year," Barkin asked.

"Yes," said Thomas, "but I had to borrow the money to pay my poll tax."

The next mill worker, Paul Fowler, was several cuts below Thomas, economically speaking. He is a spinning fixer at Whittier Mills at Chattahoochee, and his main worry is that his wife will fall through the floor of their home.

"I'm ashamed of my home," he said. "One of the boys fell through the floor last week. My wife's a heavy woman, and I'm afraid she'll go through next."

"None of us' been killed so far," he philosophized.

The Fowlers, like the Thomases, feed five children. When they work the father makes $15.94 a week and the mother, a weaver, $10 a week.

Their diet is cornbread, dried beans and fried bacon, without milk or butter, Fowler said.

and head high. I call it a regular mosquito harbor."

His garbage, he said, is never collected, whereas the Thomas garbage is taken up every two weeks by the town of Douglasville if it is left in the street.

While both workers have yards, neither has a garden. Thomas said he is too tired after work to tend a garden, while Fowler pointed out that the company wouldn't cut his grass.

Both men criticized sanitation in their villages. Thomas said the water was cut off twice a day and that overflow from the mill was piped into a branch that runs within 10 yards of 13 houses.

Fowler criticized his mill for not scrubbing the floors and "or not cleaning rest rooms more than twice a week."

Graham, of North Carolina, appeared at the invitation of Spencer Pitts, one member of counsel for Industries Committee No. 1, and Hyman Battle, North Carolina textile executive, in favor of the proposed minimum.

"I appear," he said, "not as an economist or textile expert or any kind of an expert. I appear as a human being with a human interest in social legislation, of which the fair labor standards act is a most recent part."

He considered the 32 1/2-cent minimum a sincere proposed application, and also had kind words for the opposition.

Not Carpetbaggers.

"The majority recommendation for a 32 1/2-cent minimum does not represent another resurgence of northern carpetbaggers bent on bleeding the south. The minority report is not another resurgence of southern slaveholders bent on restoring human emancipation."

Graham read from his prepared statement. "It is part of the American democratic process that there be proposals for social adjustments to changing conditions."

"This opposition, instead of being a matter of southern backwardness or human cussedness, is a part of a social process not confined to southernness. It is part of the textile south, and is part of a historic process as old as democratic social legislation itself."

As a student of social legislation, Graham mentioned that proposals for shorter hours, minimum wages and the like always were resisted as certain to destroy or cripple industry in general or some industry in particular.

It is regrettable, he said, that social legislation does bring about some maladjustment, but such legislation is necessary in the larger sense.

The cotton textile industry with its overcapacity and instability, with its rapid and wide fluctuations in price structure, with the competition of substitute and synthetic fibers, with the competition of low wage countries, with narrow mill margins and shifts in consumer preferences, constitute a problem that deserves sympathetic understanding and the opportunity to make gradual adjustments to changes in the wage structure," he read.

As High As Possible.

"Personally, I favor as high wages as the law, the financial resources, competent business management, the competitive market and fair prices to consumers will permit. Wages unmistakably go to large groups of human beings. Wages become part of the purchasing power and well-being of our people. Too often, the wealth the south produces is drained off by tariffs, discriminatory freight rates, absentee financial overlords, educational overlords, export of talent, and lower southern wage levels. The proposed minimum wage will be a good thing for the textile industry in general and the south in particular."

Graham gave the case for the opposition, gently attacking it as he read.

ment, labor and the government here may join hands toward that mastery in behalf of a more productive and nobler south, in the making of a fairer America."

Others who testified during the day were Paul Christopher, of Spartanburg; Roy Lawrence, Atlanta, and Joseph W. Knapick, of New Jersey. Christopher and Lawrence are officials of the CIO's Textile Workers' Union of America, and Knapick is president of the Dyers, Finishers, Printers and Bleachers Federation of America.

Knapick painted an especially gloomy picture of northern capital profiting by southern misery; moving their plants, to the low wage south, leaving thousands of 66 cents an hour workers behind.

Rubin M. Haman, Montgomery, Declares It 'the Greatest Day' of His Life.

Rubin M. Haman, of Montgomery, Ala., one of a group of aliens who will receive final citizenship papers in federal court here this morning, wrote The Constitution yesterday he would consider this "the greatest day" of his life.

To commemorate the event, he has composed a prayer to express his grateful appreciation of the privilege of becoming an American citizen. It follows:

"For our new adopted country, our flag, O gracious God, we thank Thee today. Thy marvelous kindness has manifested on honoring us the certificate of citizenship of Thy country—Thy kingdom known as the United States of America."

"Most heartily we beseech Thee Thy favor to behold and bless Thy servant, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, the President of Thy great country—the United States of America—all the institutions—authorities. Amen. Democracy as Thy golden rule."

12,000 SHRINERS STRUT IN PARADE

200,000 Baltimoreans View Colorful Spectacle.

BALTIMORE, June 27.—(AP)—Twelve thousand Shriners strutted colorfully before 200,000 admiring Baltimore spectators in the first parade of their national convention today.

Parade exhibits ranged from a huge pyramid towed by Nubian "slaves" of Chicago's Medinah temple to a six-inch child's toy "float" which an Aleppo (Boston) temple Shiner pulled on a string to the delight of the packed thousands along the five-mile route.

Overcast clouds withheld threatened rain, and gave paunchy, perspiring paraders welcome respite from the sun.

Shrine units from the Pacific coast, Canada and the deep south joined eastern seaboard and middle western delegations in the parade.

Today, in the numerous footpaths worn across the lawns, there were large signs with the bold lettering: "Keep Off!"

BANKS FACE LOSS IN L. S. U. SCANDAL

statement by Attorney General David M. Ellison that the bank would have to stand good for $300,000 borrowed there by Smith, last seen in Memphis, Tenn.

Ellison explained Smith obtained this money and $100,000 each from two other banks on invalid notes which he said were accepted by the banks without authority of the State Bond and Tax Board, as required under the law for obligations of the state university.

Oliver G. Lucas, president of the National Bank of Commerce, tonight said the $300,000 note it held was a Louisiana State University note, representing "a loan made to the university on authority of duly adopted and certified resolution by its board of supervisors."

Liability Denied.

"We regard this loan as a valid and binding obligation of the university," Lucas said.

"I am happy to inform the citizens of this state that, after careful and exhaustive study of the liability of the university of these loans, I have come to the conclusion they do not constitute a valid obligation on the university," Ellison had said a short time earlier.

The board of supervisors, mentioned by Lucas, is composed of 14 members. It met yesterday to accept Smith's resignation, pledging a clean-up of university affairs. J. Emory Adams, Smith's nephew, late today told state police he had driven Smith to Memphis, where state police said he could not now be located.

Hold Loan Legal.

Officers of the City National Bank, of Baton Rouge, where Smith obtained $100,000 on notes, late today likewise held the transaction regular and legal, and an officer stated "I am certain the state will pay the loan."

The National Bank of Commerce in New Orleans advanced Smith $300,000 on May 2, a Baton Rouge Bank $100,000 on June 9, and the Hibernia National Bank here another $100,000 June 15. Smith closed out his brokerage accounts here about June 20, and disappeared June 25.

A charge of embezzlement of $100,000 university funds still stood against Smith today despite

NEW TWINS WIN PAPA'S RELEASE IN LAW VIOLATIONS

Jesse M. Turner appeared in recorder's court yesterday to answer charges of operating a vehicle without a driver's license and making an illegal turn.

"Judge," he said, "I had every intention of getting my license last Saturday, but I work on a small budget, and as my wife was expecting a child, I had to make allowance for that. When she presented me with twins last Saturday, it caught me unawares, and I won't have the spare cash to get the license until next pay-day."

Judge Callaway looked at the evidence brought to court, a boy and a girl, and declared that "it was enough to catch any man unawares." He suspended sentence on both charges, and congratulated Turner.

'Sandman' Patrolman Rocks Babies To Sleep

KANSAS CITY, June 27.—(AP)—At 3 a. m. Ed Cassidy and three other patrolmen were called to a rooming house where an intoxicated prowler was terrorizing the occupants with a revolver.

A woman, with two crying baby boys, said she had recognized the prowler and volunteered to accompany the officers. She handed her babies to Cassidy, saying: "You look after them until I get back."

A half hour later after a fruitless search, the officers and the mother returned. They found Cassidy rocking back and forth in a chair softly crooning "Rock-a-Bye Baby."

One baby was asleep, the other's eyes were closing.

Newest nickname for Patrolman Cassidy—"Sandman."

Ellison's explanation, the first given of what "financial irregularities" Smith actually was alleged to have committed.

Signed on Wrong Line.

Governor Long today disclosed it was Smith's error in signing on the wrong dotted line of an unauthorized university bond that brought about his downfall. Finding his name in the wrong place on a bond offered here for collateral, lawyers questioned it, and the bond was withdrawn. Long said he understood Smith should have signed at the bottom of the list of signatures, rather than the top.

Without a sideward glance, the new chief executive this morning strode down the state capital corridor where his brother, Huey P. Long, was fatally shot in September, 1935, and swept flower bouquets and congratulatory telegrams aside to make room to work on the Governor's desk.

Jury Broadens Inquiry.

"I dedicate my life during the short year of my administration," Long said, "to a determined effort to give Louisiana an honest, upright, capable, efficient administration of its public affairs—in short, a square deal."

As Long undertook his housecleaning of state scandals a federal grand jury in New Orleans announced broadening of its inquiry into charges of irregularities in the WPA throughout Louisiana, paralleling another federal inquiry into this phase of affairs of the WPA itself.

BOY LEADS POLICE '70 M.P.H.' CHASE

Youth Claims He Thought Pursuers Were 'Holdup Men or Something.'

A 17-year-old boy was arrested on a variety of traffic violation charges as a climax to a wild automobile chase through the Penn avenue section late yesterday which brought hundreds of people to the scene to find out what was going on.

D. R. Longino, state revenue officer, said he first noticed the car at Baker and Piedmont and gave chase because he thought it was "either a bug operator or a liquor runner."

The route followed was north on Piedmont to North avenue, east on North avenue to Penn avenue and then north on Penn avenue to Eighth street.

There Calvin Sticher, of 1060 Mangrove street, was finally forced to the curb and explained that he thought he was being pursued "by a holdup man or something." He was charged with reckless driving, speeding and running through a red light.

Longino said their speed at one time was as high as 70 miles an hour. Sticher admitted driving 45 miles an hour. He was accompanied by Winnard Stewart, 16, of 368 Kelly street. No charges were placed against Stewart.

JUNK YARD PLEAS TO BE CONSIDERED THIS AFTERNOON

Applications for Permits
To Operate for Year
Will Be Taken Up by Planning Commission.

Application of about 50 junk yard dealers and automobile wrecking establishments for permits to operate for the year, beginning in July, will be heard by the city planning commission at a meeting at 3 o'clock at the city hall.

Action will be deferred on about 50 other applications already filed with City Clerk Joe L. Richardson, but not yet officially referred by council to the commission, Walter S. McNeal Jr., chairman of the zoning subcommittee of the commission, announced.

Several petitions for changing zoning restrictions also are scheduled for consideration at this afternoon's meeting.

McNeal said the commission will not be "harsh on operators of junk yards and automobile wrecking establishments who already have filed their applications for permits," but added that those who have "made no effort to comply with the law, should be forced to cease operation at once."

The following petitions for changing the existing zoning ordinance are scheduled for a hearing:

To change from a dwelling house district to a business district property extending forty-eight (48) feet on the west side of Juniper street, N. E., beginning forty-eight (48) feet north of Eleventh street. Petitioner, T. D. Crockett.

Economy Report Weights 7 Pounds

Seven pounds of "economy" thumped down on the desks of Georgia state officials yesterday. It was the 592-page report of the house economy and efficiency investigating committee, delivered by Secretary James Duggan.

Other copies were boxed for mailing to general assembly members at about 30 cents postage each.

A bit of the committee's philosophy was injected into the preface. It was that stanza of tolerance which goes: "There is so much good in the worst of us."

"And so much bad in the best of us."

"That it behooves any of us

"To talk about the rest of us."

GEORGIAN CAUGHT 2 SHELLS IN WAR

The vessel was pulling out of New York harbor for her second voyage when the gun crew, of which Shafer was a member, was ordered to get 20 rounds of ammunition in the "readyboxes" alongside all 45 guns. Shafer was detailed to go down in the magazine and send the ammunition up on rope pulleys.

"The line that the boatswain furnished me," Shafer told Wheelchel, "looked too risky for this kind of work and I refused to use it. The boatswain's mate, who was a foreigner, complained, but gave me a new inch-line which was to carry 150 pounds, the full capacity being 1,000 pounds."

"I proceeded with the new line by putting the nose of the projectiles—two shells faced in opposite directions to balance the weight—then hitching the line in the center. I signalled the boys above to hoist away. The first hoist reached the top, but when one of the gun crew named Swann, reached over the hatch to release the shells, the line parted in his hand, as if cut, leaving both shells hitched together to fall three decks below into the magazine where I was stationed with two other crew members and some 600 shells of a highly explosive nature."

"Although Swann yelled a warning, I jumped under the falling shells in an attempt to catch them. I caught them but my left hand was torn, the left side of my head was badly cut and my eighth dorsal vertebrae was fractured."

While still unconscious and partially paralyzed, Shafer was carried up several flights of ladders to the hospital. He did not gain consciousness until six hours later. Lieutenant Commander Gilbert P. Chase, in command of the ship, refused to return Shafer to land for hospitalization, saying he had rather have Shafer as a patient aboard ship than to lose him entirely.

Seaman Shafer proceeded to France where he remained a few days, and was not returned to New York until November 18, 1917.

During a leave of absence in 1919, Shafer became a patient at the Wesley Memorial hospital in Atlanta where Dr. Oscar L. Miller, a "this boy" specialist, treated him.

"This boy," Representative Wheelchel said, "certainly performed a marvelous feat, and it seems to me some recognition should be given to him in the way of a citation for heroism."

Aero Club Will Air Differences On Airport Runway Orders

Owners of Private Planes Protest Ban From Concrete Aprons Unless They Equip Ships With Radio Receivers; Officials Claim Safety Precaution.

Differences between private airplane owners of Atlanta and authorities at Candler field over an order refusing permission to private planes not equipped with radio receivers to land on concrete runways broke into the open yesterday. They will be aired Friday night at a meeting of the Aero Club of Atlanta.

The order signed by Ben Faulkner, senior control tower operator, and issued June 22, prohibits approximately 50 planes owned and operated by local amateurs to use any but dirt landing spaces between the concrete runs unless they radio equip their machines.

While Faulkner was explaining that the step was taken as "a safety measure" to protect pilots themselves as well as other machines, club members pointed out that the order is even more strict than "those in force by the Civil Aeronautics Authority, which only bars night flying in control zones without radio equipment."

William K. Jenkins, president of the Aero Club, said the meeting will begin at 7 o'clock Friday night, and asserted that a petition is being circulated, urging city council to keep the dirt areas in good condition to protect local amateurs from bodily injury and their planes from damage.

William Owens, one of those who will be affected by the order, said he has just equipped one plane with radio at a cost of $255, while Faulkner estimated the cost at from $35 to $40. Owens said the cheaper installation is unreliable.

"Traffic is so heavy at peak periods that local ships are in the way," Faulkner said in explaining why the order was issued. "If a plane pulls on the runway, and we give him a red light, he just has to sit there, unless we can talk to him by radio. If he does and a ship dashes close by him, he is apt to lose confidence."

"The order was to protect the pilot himself. We believe it is necessary. If he sits on the runway, the incoming ship must come in over him and this sometimes throws the incoming craft too far over the field."

"Some of the planes prefer dirt for landing. We must have some system, some orderly way to control the ships and those we cannot communicate with to protect them and others using the field must be regulated in some manner."

Faulkner estimated that about 40 ships would be affected by the order, but Owens said the number was about 55.

Pushed To Background.
"I don't think it is right for us to be pushed into the background," Owens said. "The boys should be entitled to use the runways just as much as commercial air lines and the army or navy planes or anyone else. We are petitioning city council to see that the dirt areas are kept free of holes and other dangerous obstacles to smooth landing if this order is to stick."

"If we could go anywhere else, we would abandon the airport and go there, but the nearest good field is at Griffin—38 miles away."

"The order will not be so bad if the city keeps the dirt areas in good repair, but if they are neglected someone is going to get hurt. I don't think a receiver should be demanded of us. The federal government doesn't do that except under special circumstances."

Faulkner, however, expressed the belief that federal regulations will require receivers within the next few months.

Mayor Hartsfield, who was asked to abrogate the order, said he was going to stick behind Jack Gray, manager of the airport. Gray was out of the city yesterday as was Councilman Cecil W. Hester, chairman of the council committee in charge of the field.

Not Georgia Alone

While the state of Georgia is facing perplexing problems in regard to its financial affairs, it must not be imagined this state is the only one in such a quandary. The truth is there are few states in this country today which are not finding it exceedingly difficult to raise sufficient revenue through taxes to meet the demands of the new theories of social responsibility of government.

The legislature of Texas, for instance, has just ended a session which ran for five months, most of its time having been devoted to a struggle between Governor O'Daniel and one faction, which wanted more money for old age pensions, and those who fought bitterly against every plan for increasing state taxes. When adjournment finally came the issue was still deadlocked and Texans are now discussing the probabilities of an extra session on that problem this summer.

In Texas there are 118,000 individuals on the old-age pension rolls. A recent revision in the law as to eligibility will increase this total by 85,000 more. And the pension department is already in debt to the banks, obligations which will soon begin coming due at the rate of $200,000 a month. Which, it is pointed out, means a loss to the department of $400,000 monthly, because of inability to match, on a 50-50 basis, federal funds.

As pointed out by Peter Molyneux in the Texas Weekly, the basic cause for such a situation, general all over the country, is the continued faith by governments, federal, state and local, in the spend-and-spend policy, while at the same time the limit of taxation possibility has either been reached or exceeded. Added to this is the fact so many individuals have never realized that, regardless of the treasury through which it comes, all public expenditures must be paid by money collected as taxes. The federal government does not "give" any money to any governmental subdivision, it merely returns money already taken as taxes from the citizens of that state or city or county.

Another, and even more tragic condition, is that many citizens believe they, as individuals, pay no taxes. Simply because they do not directly pay income tax or ad valorem tax or poll tax, they labor under the delusion they do not contribute at all to Uncle Sam, their state treasury or their local public funds.

Of course, nothing could be farther from the truth. Every man who pays for a loaf of bread, a pound of meat, a shirt, a month's rent, pays income and other taxes. On the tax collectors' books they are listed as paid by the baker, the butcher, the shirt-maker, the landlord, but they have been passed on in the price paid by the ultimate consumer. Business is not to be criticized for this. If taxes could not thus be passed on, the business man would quickly be compelled to close his doors.

Reliable reports place at more than 20 cents the amount taken out of each dollar spent by everyone, for taxes. It is estimated the average weekly tax payments by the average family in the United States is $8. That same family is compelled, knowingly or unknowingly, to give $400 of its annual income to the tax collectors.

The new proposal by the federal government for $3,800,000,000 expenditures through self-liquidating loans, government securities, etc., is the result of one thing only. That is, the budget cannot be balanced between the New Deal rate of outgo on the one side and the tax-paying abilities of the people on the other. The national debt will, within a few months, reach the statutory limit of $45,000,000,000. If the expenditures of the New Deal are to be continued, it is imperative the mounting debt be debited in some other column than the national deficit.

Thus the new plan for issuance of government obligations against alleged self-liquidating projects. If those obligations face the danger of ultimate default it will, again, be the taxpayer—which means all of us—who will have to pay.

The only solution for the ever-mounting rate of expenditures by the federal government, by the state governments—Texas, Georgia and all the rest—facing the limitation on taxpaying ability, is a crystallization of public sentiment for either greater sacrifices or for the abandonment of the spending policy. And that crystallization must be so conclusive it will be forced to realization through the congress and the various state legislative bodies.

How much of the spending program can we afford? What features should be retained and which abandoned? Are we willing to pay the price, in taxation, for perfection of the program of social security upon which we have embarked?

These are typical of the questions which must be answered by the people themselves before the most pressing problem of today can be brought to solution.

The First Major Air Battle

Extent of the warfare in progress on the Manchukuo-Outer Mongolia border, between Japan and Russia under other names, is not definitely known. That heavy fighting has been and is taking place in the air has been announced in both Tokyo and Moscow. This, if true, is extremely important because it is the first time in history that two foes fully equipped for modern air combat have met in a major engagement.

Two conclusions may be drawn from these preliminary clashes, although the fighting took place between forces small by comparison with those predicted if actual war comes in Europe.

First, the rate of enemy plane destruction, as claimed by both sides, seems exaggerated and indicates little reliance is to be placed in war news with highly greased propaganda machines in operation. Second, if there is even half truth in the reports that planes were brought down wholesale, it indicates that defense against air attack has been developed far beyond the point generally accepted by lay observers.

The first conclusion may be dismissed as unimportant. Hot air won't win many battles, even in the air. The Japanese claims that 151 Russian planes have been downed in 30 days, that 18 of their planes attacked a fleet of 150 Russian planes and brought down a total of 61 with a loss of only five of their own, in one battle, may be taken with a grain of salt. It sounds too much like pap for home consumption. Soviet Russia, at this rate, soon would be reduced to a nonentity in the air.

Claims from Moscow are more reasonable. The Russians say a fight between 50 Soviet planes and 60 Japanese resulted in a "rout" for the latter with a loss of 25 Japanese air ships. Fifty-nine Japanese planes have been downed in three weeks according to a Soviet spokesman.

The importance of the second conclusion, however, cannot be overemphasized. It confirms, in practical demonstration, American, French and British military opinion that Germany would fail in attempting to deliver the much-talked-about "knock-out blow." Tremendous damage could without doubt be inflicted, but bombers can't accurately bomb and, at the same time, successfully defend themselves against an equal number of defensive planes.

Previous tests of air raiding effectiveness under actual war conditions—in Ethiopia, Spain and China—were not tests in any true sense of the term. Ethiopia was totally undefended. Leftist Spain had few planes and relied almost entirely upon anti-aircraft guns, while China has seen her cities destroyed only because she lacked the equipment to meet the Japanese attack in the air—plane for plane.

It seems probable the first major modern air battle between foes fully equipped for the fight from both angles, offense and defense, has done much to destroy the lay belief that Britain and France would be helpless at any time Hitler and Mussolini decided to deliver the "knock-out" punch.

Again, an answer man reminds us there were no fiddles when Rome burned. It is not known what Nero could have felt as fit as, if he did.

Tin Pan alley has been slow to come through with a smashing possibility-of-war song. No way has been found to rhyme "totalitarian" with moon.

The storing away of news reels will be a boon to future generations. Posterity can decide for itself which of our Caesars made the worst faces.

If what the gas and chemical experts say is so, the next world conflict will be easily distinguished from the war of the roses by the smell.

Bigger than we ever dreamed is the current building revival. A local hotel tablecloth yesterday carried a penciled plan of a 22-room house.

Editorial of the Day

ANSWER TO ISOLATIONISM

(From The Baltimore Sun.)

The word isolationism used to have a special and limited significance in this country. It came into use in this limited sense during the fight over the Versailles treaty. Those who opposed our participation in the League of Nations and our adherence to the World Court were isolationists, and the term came to be synonymous with adherence to a policy of non-participation in the political interchanges of European governments.

More recently the word has taken on a wider meaning. It means withdrawal, not only in the political sense but also in economic and commercial matters. There are still isolationists who think exclusively in political terms, but there are many more who supplement their insistence upon the avoidance of foreign involvements by asserting that we ought also to stop cultivating the opportunities for foreign trade—except perhaps in this hemisphere. Those who hold to this wider isolationist philosophy believe that we ought to depend for the improvement of our standard of living solely on the more intensive development of our domestic resources.

Here is something for the economic isolationists to think about. Precisely how far it would be necessary to introduce arbitrary controls into our trade and commerce to readjust our economy to a domestic basis it is impossible to say, but that such controls would be needed on a scale even more formidable than the most ingenious contrivances of the NRA ever dreamed of is clear. And it is equally clear that unless we wish to restrict our economic freedom here at home, we had better stop thinking of self-sufficiency and lend our support to the restoration of world trade with all possible vigor.

THE CAPITAL PARADE FAIR ENOUGH

By JOSEPH ALSOP AND ROBERT KINTNER.

ROOSEVELT-LEWIS RIFT WASHINGTON, June 27.—A personal relationship which may have the political future in its hands, the relationship between Franklin Delano Roosevelt and John Lewis, the statement that there could be no peace between the following and the AFL, it has been more unfriendly than ever before.

The reasons for the lack of sympathy between these two political allies are fairly obvious ones. Both are dominant egos, accustomed to the center of the stage. Roosevelt's manner strikes Lewis as patronizing, and Lewis' refusal to accept New Deal leadership in all things strikes Roosevelt as ungrateful. Each wants more of the other than can be given. Lewis, for instance, was infuriated by the behavior of the White House during the recent coal strike, which, though immensely helpful to Lewis' United Mine Workers, did not take the form of open, energetic support. Roosevelt, on his side, is often angered by Lewis outbursts, like the one aforementioned, which knocked presidentially-sponsored AFL-CIO peace negotiations into a cocked hat.

The imagination boggles at the attempt to picture one of the infrequent Roosevelt-Lewis meetings. In his bland, genial way, the President is in the habit of doing most of the talking, while Lewis when another leads the talk, has a way of sitting in such monumental silence that all but the most determined conversation quietly expires. Finally, the politics of the two men are fundamentally different. Lewis has taken on a protective New Deal coloring in these last years, but it must be remembered that he was once a Coolidge Republican. In private, he says quite frankly that he has not the slightest faith in the economic policies of the New Deal, and he can be extremely bitter in his criticism of the President's leadership.

CHAFING IN THE YOKE Thus far, of course, the two men have been yoked together by political convenience. The White House is confident that the yoke will hold, and pretends to care little for Lewis' occasional displays of public or behind-the-scenes truculence. Lewis and his CIO henchmen are not so sure of the yoke's permanence, and meanwhile they argue that truculence toward the White House is a good thing in and of itself, and would have to be their policy even if the President were Lewis' particular enemy.

In fact, the theory is entertained by Lewis, his general counsel, Lee Pressman, and others in the CIO policy-forming group, that labor has got to kick like a steer to get its deserts in a liberal administration. They say that, just like the President and his New Dealers are liberals, and can boast that they have served labor in broad policy, they have a tendency to tip the scales in favor of the businessmen when it comes to specific problems. Businessmen may regard this theory as hilariously funny, but that is beside the point.

Then, too, Pressman has considerable influence with Lewis, and the ill-will between him and the President's most conspicuous personal advisers is extremely ill-concealed. Thus the New Dealers and the CIO-ers, though acting together when they are forced to do so, are constantly glancing at one another. Each crowd expects the other to snatch an unfair advantage, and each is determined that, if any unfair advantage is to be snatched, they will get there first.

PENSION SHENANIGAN Meanwhile, the CIO is constantly enlarging the area of its activities. Candidates for the supreme court, and even for the librarianship of congress, have been supported. All sorts of governmental policies have been rashly opposed or approved. And there are always efforts to make treaties with other large pressure groups, which would confer a certain independence of the New Deal.

The most recent of these treaty-making efforts, incidentally, may prove to be exceedingly significant. It took the form of a CIO endorsement of old-age pensions of $60 a month for single persons and $80 for married couples over 60 years of age. It was aimed, of course, at the old-age pension groups. It was decided on after CIO experience in working with the "ham-and-eggs" movement in the California senatorial election, and after a quarrel over pension policies between the CIO men and the Social Security Board. Lee Pressman and his assistant, Joseph Kovner, were the real authors of the move.

For present purposes, however, it is best to presume that the New Dealers and the CIO men will continue yoked together, but to remember that oxen yoked together but not pulling together don't get as far as more co-operative draft animals.

SILHOUETTES

*They strolled along

They didn't have
So much to say,
But hand found hand
In strangest way
And life began
For two, that day.*

The Folks You See

They say that the boy or girl who grows to maturity upon a farm never finds anything in city life to satisfy the subconscious nostalgia for the feel of the warm earth and the aroma of growing things.

The city-bred man or woman has something to offset this, though. They never lose a fascination, knowing or not, to be found in strolling through the crowded streets and scanning the faces of strangers who pass by.

It is generally an unconscious habit. But there is a charm about this peeping into passing eyes, catching the impression of an individuality and holding a fleeting wonder as to what kind of person that other is. Then imagination runs riot. Upon no more foundation than the clothes that other wears, and the manner in which they are worn, the turn of a lip or the glint in an eye, the swing of a hand or the strut of a stride, imagination creates a complete picture. You think you know just what sort of a person that other is. You may be woefully wrong, but you are not alone in your error, and you are satisfied with your momentary analysis.

Thus the mind gives people labels, as they pass. A hard businessman. A sympathetic sociologist. A criminal. A crook. A dreamer. A bookworm. A fool. And you could probably scramble the individuals and labels and hit a higher percentage of truth.

Man's Most Interesting Study—Someone said man's most interesting study is man. Maybe. But, strolling the busy streets, the probability is that man's most interesting study is woman. The average male sizes up, or down, each woman who passes, at least those with any claims to physical attraction at all. And he wonders what sort they would be to know, to visit, to talk with.

He eats his lunch and, in the luncheonette, a couple of tables away, are four women in eager conversation. Covertly he watches them and he thinks that he might enjoy knowing that little one, in the black hat, but deliver him from that didactic creature wearing the imitation pearls.

Then his glance wanders to another table, this one occupied by a group of young business women. Smart and snappy in appearance. But there is a calculating look about their eyes, a hard brilliance and he imagines they are discussing the sales appeal of some new idea in millinery, or whatever is their professional interest.

Keen lookers, certainly. But somehow they don't appeal as women. Snappy decoration for an office, perhaps, but too knowing for a quiet dinner table for two.

Masculine Jealousy

Which brings us around to the thought which was the peg on which this column is hung. Men don't like women who consistently beat them at a mutual activity, be it business or game.

There is a tendency in many men, probably an unconscious hangover from the days when universe centered in mother—to feel a touch of inferiority complex in most feminine company. And this tendency hasn't been helped by the rising tide of successful business and professional women. It's all right, to most men, for there to be a capable secretary in the outer office. But if that secretary wants to remain popular with her boss she will never let him get the idea that she knows as much, or more, about his business than he does. No matter how true it may be.

No, girls, if you want to retain masculine approval, let the dumb-bells continue to think they know more than you do. Appeal to them, occasionally, with that helpless gesture, even if efficiency is the rule of the organization. Listen to their dicta with a look of admiration, let them overhear you telling a caller something, now and then, that implies what a great man the boss is.

Let them take a rubber or two of bridge, occasionally and please respect their judgment in such matters as the selection of an automobile or a lawn mower.

You'll make 'em like you so much more, you see, and, on the side, they'll be so much more tractable and more susceptible to your own little wiles.

FLATTERY NEW YORK, June 27.

Society news has been Flattery a regular ingredient of American journalism since memory runneth not to the contrary, but it took a sharp downer a short time after the war when society began to frequent the gutters. Of course there were famous blackmail sheets back in the '90s, but the majority of the regular papers covered society through impoverished ex-members who could not hold up their end but still were tolerated under a sort of condescension. These society editors and reporters were mostly widows and daughters who but for the collapse of their fortunes would have been dowagers and debutantes themselves. They had a hangover of noblesse oblige and wrote flattery but were useful in the office as handy condiments of information as to who married whom 30 years before and whose daughter it was that eloped with the coachman.

It is true that society frequented the gutters even then, but not the regular gutters. Society had its private gutters in its exclusive colonies here and abroad, but after the war its members began to invade the ringside, as you may remember, and discovered that the lower classes had tastes much the same as their own.

The lower classes were very democratic. They didn't reject society people, and pretty soon the best—which is to say the worst—speakeasies were enjoying a patronage composed of a chummy mixture of the Wall Street nobility, the criminal underworld and occasional lightweights under the coverage of a new kind of newspaper specialist.

Hard to It was hard to tell just identify who was society any more, and a tout and capper for gambling and swindling activities could get himself into print as a prominent sportsman and man-about-town just by drawing up a chair and causing himself to be seen with persons who were carelessly supposed to be society.

This new school of coverage began when a New York editor perceived the change and assigned a man to hang around the dives in the side streets off Broadway with an expensive account to cover his coverage. But he was such a friendly soul that he often was scooped on stories which he had accepted under seal of personal confidence. So the field was still open really, and others rushed in unhampered by ethics or knowledge of the newspaper business or any conception of the importance of truth in reporting.

Any dirty hearsay obtained from a washroom boy, bootlegger or jealous hussy was news without further confirmation, and those papers which have used this kind of material for the sake of the circulation it would bring are responsible for this particular innovation and the discredit and enmity which it has called down on the newspaper business as a whole.

Had No People who had been libeled or whose intelligence was not as acute as that of the mat affairs had been exposed without justification had no redress, because they stood to catch it worse next time. But publishers who had intimate affairs of their own, no less interesting than some which they printed concerning others, protected themselves, proving that they knew it was dirty pool to treat others so.

Anyhow, however, society has been and remains partly blame-worthy. People who like to think of themselves as society have gone out fence-walking like cats in the moonlight, yowling their private relations for all to hear and even feigning publicity for their vanity's sake up to the point where it ceases to please their vanity and humiliates them. They send their little, immature daughters out pub-crawling in saloons infested with rodder characters and become indignant when they read little bits about them which are not exactly constructive.

A woman seen twice with a man may be reported to be engaged to marry him, although she may have a husband and he a wife.

Infinite Possibilities The possibilities for error and malicious innuendo are infinite and have been fully explored, and a man or woman who wants to reveal an enemy may do so at all by passing some word along to a professional gossip, and proprietors of some night clubs deliberately betray the patrons who spend the money which supports them by co-operating with men whose business it is to spy on the patrons at their revels.

The indignation of the fox-hunting Virginians who attacked a Washington journalist suggests that society has its own remedy for gossip. It is not far and feathering, however. It is to keep out of dumps and to exclude professional gossips from their private dissipations. Society might also try sobering up for a change and sending the brats to bed at night.

ONE WORD MORE

By RALPH MCGILL.

THE OBVIOUS WEAKNESS At the opening session of the hearing on the textile industry wages held before Wage-Hour Administrator Elmer F. Andrews, there was testimony by Professor Herman C. Nixon.

Professor Nixon's testimony illustrates rather vividly what has been a fundamental weakness of New Deal public relations. Professor Nixon was introduced as an expert. He testified at length as to the conditions in mill towns in Mississippi. Indeed, Mississippi occupied the most of his testimony. He was, therefore, appearing as an expert on Mississippi problems. He talked of the terrible living conditions in Mississippi mill towns; their backwardness in all things social.

And then, at the conclusion of his testimony, the question was asked him:
"Have you ever been in one of the Mississippi mill towns?"
"No," he answered, "I can't say that I have."

NOT, THEREFORE, AN EXPERT Now, if Mr. Nixon, who I am sure is an able man, has never been to a Mississippi mill town nor personally investigated the living conditions, he most emphatically is not an expert on Mississippi conditions. He may have read from the book of someone who is; he probably has talked with people who have been there.

This point, wholly aside from the merits of the wage-scale problem, seems to me important. Without regard to the right or wrongness of the proposed wage, the fact remains that one of the chief witnesses, introduced as an expert for the government, was a professor who had never seen nor personally investigated the specific subject on which he appeared as an expert, Mississippi's cotton mills and cotton mill towns.

Dr. Frank Graham, president of the University of North Carolina, very wisely let it be known that all he knew on the subject was what he had read. He believed that higher wages were needed by industrial workers to provide proper educational advantages. No one can quarrel with that.

SUBJECT TO CRITICISM The entire procedure could have a better public reception. The average citizen, interested in his government, will not understand why the committee's attorney, Mr. Spencer Pitts, is an attorney for one side only and seeks to break down any testimony which comes from the mill-owner side. He actually is referred to as the "prosecution." None of this jibes with the usual idea of the right of trial by jury.

It doesn't appear quite democratic. The feeling already exists that the whole thing is pretty much of a farce; that the decision already is made and the whole thing is a show to advertise the committee's decision and to seek public substantiation.

Indeed, some of the "prosecution" readily admit their "strategy" is to bring in as many southern names as they can to testify for the prosecution. This, it seems, is almost an open admission that the decision is in the bag and the testimony will not affect it.

Anyone who has seen mill towns knows there are good ones and bad ones. Obviously the living conditions in some of them are miserable and ought not to be permitted.

Yet the fact remains the committee's manner and methods are subject to criticism.

A great many people, with open minds eager to know something about the textile industry and its wage conditions, will not trust this committee.

MORE MIGRANT WORKERS? It was stated in the testimony of the first day that some of the first day that some mills might better be out of business. This is entirely conceivable.

Yet blandly to assert that it is better for 5,000 or more workers, who receive the wage and hour minimum, to be thrown out of work, seems to me a very startling and revolutionary statement.

The economist stated it would be better for them to leave Mississippi or find other industries in the state to absorb them. There already are 12,000,000 people out of work in this country and the south has its share of them. The deliberate addition of 6,000 or more unemployed to the already heavy rolls seems to me a fantastic economy.

Work is the important problem. We don't need 6,000 more migrant, unemployed textile workers.

There is no escaping the fact many are convinced the original decision was tarred with the political brush of the influence of eastern textile owners; that the feeling is the decision already is established; that the committee is not set up to capture the confidence of a people who believe in a trial by a jury which hasn't made up its mind before the testimony is heard.

We Could Save Money, Too, By Hiring Orientals to Man Our Battleships

By ROBERT QUILLEN.

A few years ago, five Oriental hoodlums, every one with a criminal record, were accused of ravishing a white woman in Hawaii. You doubtless remember the story. They never were punished, for the jury that tried them couldn't agree.

It was more than a trial of bestial criminality. The white man's civilization and standards of decency were on trial. The question was: To which standard will Hawaii's people be loyal when the test comes?

The answer was plain. There were Orientals on the jury, for they were citizens, too. Every white man voted to convict the hoodlums; every Oriental voted to acquit them.

Do you get the significance of that?

Why was such a paradise as Hawaii means to America, for they don't think about it. Navy men know, for their job is to protect us. It wasn't a mere whim that prompted the expenditure of $100,000,000 on the Pearl harbor base. That money was spent, and more must be spent, because Hawaii defends our whole Pacific coast from Alaska to Panama. The very life of the nation rests upon it. If war should come, and Hawaii should fall, the great cities of the west would go the way of China's new capital.

At all costs—by any means that may be necessary—Hawaii must be made and kept unconquerable and safe from every threat and hazard.

Its chief weakness, like that of all America, lies within itself. Most of us think of Hawaii as a tropical paradise inhabited by happy natives. It is in fact the garden spot of the earth, but the rest of the picture is wrong.

The population of more than 350,000 contains only 30,000 natives. There is a sprinkling of whites, and the rest are Orientals. About 40 per cent are Japanese.

Why was such a paradise surrendered to alien races? Many shameful episodes in our history prove that a white man who loves money has no capacity for patriotism. One little man, soon to die, will sacrifice a nation's future to build a little fortune for himself. In Hawaii, white men imported Orientals to get cheap labor.

Japanese born there are American citizens, yet they flock with the others and teach their children to be Japanese. Would you be less loyal to America if you lived on a Japanese-owned island? They know but one loyalty, and they are more patriotic than we are.

As in our Canadian waters, the fishing business of Hawaii is dominated by the Japanese, and the fishing boats are manned by trained naval reservists. Can you doubt where their loyalty would be in time of war?

Why are we so indifferent to the safety of our country? Is it ignorance, or has long security robbed us of the capacity for patriotism? Fascist lands send their people, trained and subsidized, to get a footing in South America. We aren't smart enough even to populate and reclaim our own territory.

World Peace Is Threatened On Sarajevo Anniversary

Little Remains of Versailles Treaty 20 Years After Signing; Four Danger Spots Loom in Europe on Date of Assassination of Austrian Archduke.

By ASSOCIATED PRESS.

PARIS, June 28.—(Wednesday.)

Four threats to peace dogged Europe today on the anniversary of one event which plunged the world into war and another which started the current series of crises. Exactly 23 years ago today at Sarajevo, Bosnia, then Austrian territory, the heir to the Austrian throne, Archduke Franz Ferdinand, and his wife were assassinated by a Serbian student, Gavrilo Princip. That started the chain of events which ended in a four-year world war.

Twenty years ago today a solemn gathering of statesmen at Versailles signed a "peace treaty" between 27 nations and Germany. That furnished the basis for Adolf Hitler's Nazi campaign, which now is gathering momentum toward scrapping the few parts of the Versailles document that remain in effect.

Millions Under Arms. Throughout the world governments are frantically rebuilding their war machines. Millions of men in armies, navies and air forces are "on the alert" for the signal that might plunge two hemispheres into another devastating conflict.

What are the danger spots? First, the Free City of Danzig, the Vistula river port on the Baltic sea. It is 98 per cent German but its economic life is controlled by Poland. Closely associated with the Danzig question is Pomorze, the so-called Polish Corridor which splits Germany proper from East Prussia and gives Poland her only seaport.

Second, the Baltic states of Finland, Estonia and Latvia, which are now the crux of a complicated diplomatic argument between Great Britain, France and Soviet Russia over a projected accord against Germany and Italy.

Fear Assistance Pact. The little states maintain that they do not want to be named in any such assistance pact for fear of possible reprisals from Berlin. Russia insists that they be included in some form to give her absolute protection against possible Nazi aggression. Britain apparently is according to the Soviet demand and France already is willing to include them.

Along the sideline other allies of what the Germans call the "encirclement bloc" await developments for war or peace. Poland, Rumania, Greece and Turkey—all have lined up by accord or declaration in support of the British-French front against the Rome-Berlin axis.

Insists On Colonies. Third, Germany still insists on return of colonies that were taken in penalty at Versailles. So far she has gained none of them but her internal and external campaign continues. The basis of her claim is need for raw materials. Her conquerors of 20 years ago deny this claim and assert they are willing to negotiate to provide her necessities if she will promise to preserve peace.

Fourth, the following Germany's territorial acquisitions in Austria, Czechoslovakia and Memel, Italy wants her share in Tunisia, Corsica, Nice, French Somaliland and a place on the Suez canal board of directors.

France has denied these claims. Linked militarily and diplomatically with Great Britain, Premier Daladier's government has taken a strong stand against relinquishing "a single inch" of the French empire.

League on Wane. Almost alone of the now-valid Versailles treaty provisions stands the League of Nations at Geneva. But that organization, its diplomatic influence on the wane, has turned to seeking solutions of labor and social problems in an effort to maintain the firm, just and durable peace planned 20 years ago.

Here are the principal clauses of the Versailles treaty, and what has become of them:

1. The League of Nations . . . Alive but that's about all.
2. Punishment of the Kaiser . . . never enforced.
3. Territories and colonies . . . Germany has expanded almost exclusively in Europe but regained no colonies and very little of the European territory taken away by the Versailles treaty.
4. Disarmament . . . Dead.
5. Economic provisions . . . Mostly carried out.
6. Guarantees enforcing treaty . . . All lapsed or abandoned.
7. Reparations . . . No payments since 1931.

British Presses for Pact.

Informed London quarters reported that French British proposals designed to overcome the stalemate in negotiations with Soviet Russia on the Baltic question would be dispatched to Moscow within 24 hours attempting to get Soviet adherence to a mutual assistance pact with France and Britain.

A semi-official statement of the German foreign office said a British was about to give Russia a "blank check" in the shape of guarantees to Finland, Estonia and Latvia which she could use to provide a war at any time, in her judgment, the independence of these countries was threatened.

DALADIER WARNS OF GRAVE CRISIS

PARIS, June 27.—(AP)—Blunt-spoken Premier Edouard Daladier adjourned the French parliament for its summer vacation tonight with the warning that the gravest international crisis "in 20 years" faced France with 3,000,000 soldiers across her frontiers.

He said the troop concentrations were "more important than ever before" and did not count "semi-military units."

The Premier apparently referred to the picture of dangers surrounding France in reply to a series of questions posed by Louis Frossard on the use of the government powers during the summer recess.

"On our frontiers there are 3,000,000 men without counting semi-military units," he declared in a low voice. "And in the interior they are working frantically in factories while we receive announcements of concentrations of troops more important than ever before along our frontiers in the guise of maneuvers."

He intimated that if France had not mobilized a large part of her reserves Europe might already have been at war.

"Two classes of reserves under the colors are absolutely necessary if France is to be protected against all eventualities."

Although he promised that France was ready for peaceful collaboration he added she was "resolved, and the world must know it, to resist with all her force at any attempt at domination."

Convict Camps Are Reduced

Eighth of Former Total, or 14, Abolished Since June, 1938; Only 100 Are in Existence Today.

Nearly one-eighth of Georgia's county convict camps have been abolished in the last year, the State Board of Penal Correction disclosed yesterday.

Where 114 county work camps were in operation in June, 1938, only 100 exist today. Five have been discontinued since January 1, 1939.

Phil Anderson, executive secretary of the penal board, said Bibb, Ben Hill, Miller and Early counties had surrendered all prisoners, and part of the convict load had been taken from Effingham. Previously county camps had been discontinued in Gilmer, Lincoln, Montgomery, Toombs, Walker, Grady, Dodge, Talbot and Wilkinson.

Most of the counties, Anderson explained, turned back their convicts for financial reasons. Governor Rivers recently banned renewal of county highway contracts for convict labor pending solution of the state's fiscal problem.

The executive order under which Governor Rivers assumed blanket fiscal control of the State Highway Department has been relaxed affecting "local purchases," it was learned yesterday.

The original order instructed the Highway Board to obtain the Governor's approval for every department expenditure of $25 or more.

It also was learned that the Highway Department budget request for the approaching fiscal quarter would be almost $1,000,000 less than the current quarter request of $4,000,000. The Governor slashed the $4,000,000 request precisely in half and wrote off approximately 500 names on the department payroll.

An authentic source disclosed that 40 to 50 per cent of the personnel "write-off" had been stored. The Governor's April 1 executive order halting contract lettings also was amended three times to permit letting work estimated to cost approximately $2,000,000.

Of $2,578,000 allotted to 90 counties last July for convict labor projects, $2,725,000 has been used, the highway department reported. A balance of $853,000—now under contract—still is available.

13 Exhaust Allotments. Thirteen counties have exhausted their contract allotments, the highway department said, and "about 60 more" were expected to report similar lack of funds "in the next two or three weeks."

Anderson explained the penal board did not question obligation of the state to maintain prisoners, but Anderson said the penal board had arranged to spread the added convict load among existing state highway camps, Tattall prison, and other county camps which volunteer to take additional prisoners.

Facilities at Reidsville (Tattall prison), Anderson said, would allow accommodation of "from 500 to 600 more prisoners. Approximately 1,065 prisoners now are held at Reidsville; another 800 are distributed among five state-operated highway work camps at Dallas, Soperton, Work, Lakeland and Cairo.

If all county public works camps were abandoned, the state could be called upon to maintain a maximum of about 8,100 prisoners.

to the troops of Germany, Italy and Spain and by "semi-military units" meant the German S. S. and S. A. organizations and the Fascist militia of Italy.

Adjournment Is Sudden.

The sudden adjournment, which took most deputies by surprise, created an uproar in the chamber which had expected the session to continue through this week and possibly next since several important questions were pending.

Deputies who had received their gas masks just before reading of the closing decree expressed amazement at the extreme pessimism of the premier's speech delivered in a heavy, measured tone.

At the senate, where Daladier later read the same decree, he was equally grave and was heard by the senators in dead silence.

Issues Warning. "We are in the hands of events and it is possible that the parliamentary vacation will be more brief than those who are protesting against closing the session think," he said.

Some deputies said this referred to the constitutional requirement that parliament must act on any declaration of war.

"What we ask you," he said, "is to leave the government the liberty of movement that is essential at the present moment."

Paints Gloomy Picture. The premier painted a gloomy picture of dangers surrounding France in reply to a series of questions posed by Louis Frossard on the use of the government powers during the summer recess.

"On our frontiers there are 3,000,000 men without counting semi-military units," he declared in a low voice. "And in the interior they are working frantically in factories while we receive announcements of concentrations of troops more important than ever before along our frontiers in the guise of maneuvers."

He intimated that if France had not mobilized a large part of her reserves Europe might already have been at war.

"Two classes of reserves under the colors are absolutely necessary if France is to be protected against all eventualities."

Although he promised that France was ready for peaceful collaboration he added she was "resolved, and the world must know it, to resist with all her force at any attempt at domination."

Styron Warns Drinking Firemen Face Dismissal

Imbibing on or off Duty Will Cause Immediate Action; Fire Masters Voice Approval

Fire Chief C. C. Styron last night warned that he would recommend dismissal of firemen found guilty of drinking.

In a statement following a regular meeting of the Board of Firemasters, Chief Styron said:

"I will notify each and every station that drinking on or off duty must be stopped, or I shall have to recommend dismissal. This is a stand I do not enjoy taking, but I feel that strenuous measures must be taken to correct an evil."

All Pledge Aid. The board, presided over by Councilman John T. Marler, chairman, unanimously pleaded Chief Styron co-operation in his efforts to halt drinking among firemen and urged him to "crack down" on offenders.

A short time before Styron made his statement, the board unanimously accepted the recommendation of the chief that L. O. Winburn, 38, a member of the fire department for 12 years, be suspended for 30 days.

Winburn appeared before the board and pleaded guilty to charges of drinking while intoxicated June 14, an offense for which he was fined $52 in recorder's court. He threw himself on the mercy of the board.

Captain J. N. Suttles, of Station No. 11, testified in Winburn's behalf, pointing out that he was a "good, regular man" and that this was his first offense.

Drennon Expresses Opinion. The consensus was expressed by Alderman Raleigh Drennon, who said:

"Drinking is an evil condition that must be corrected, and we will go the limit with the chief in his plans to stamp it out of the department. Whatever he recommends, we will follow."

The board accepted the resignation of E. L. Reilly, suspended several weeks ago, and postponed action on the case of Dewey L. Barfield, who was charged with violating regulations regarding his personal financial obligations.

Besides Councilman Marler and Alderman Drennon and Styron those attending the meeting were Councilmen C. M. Bolen, V. T. Knight, E. A. Minor, C. L. Chosewood and Charles Murphy, of the city attorney's office.

The camera caught this photograph of the Board of Firemasters' meeting last night, in which drinking by firemen, on or off duty, was deemed as a "great evil." In the group (left to right) are: Councilmen W. T. Knight, E. A. Minor, Fire Chief C. C. Styron, Councilman John T. Marler, board chairman;

Charles Murphy, of the city attorney's office; Alderman Raleigh Drennon, Councilmen C. L. Chosewood and C. M. (Mac) Bolen. The board promised to "crack down" on firemen violating the "no-drinking" rule.

CONGRESS PRODDED AS DEADLINE NEARS

lief bill, the senate ran first of all into three delays—it obtained a quorum only after its sergeant-at-arms had rounded up absentees, and then found the appropriations committee had not yet finished work on the measure. In mid-afternoon, the committee reported it, but Senator Johnson, Republican, California, objected to debating the measure until printed copies were available, and the senate had to wait until the government printing office could produce them. It was nearly 5 o'clock when debate started.

House Bill Altered.

As reported, the measure lies much closer to the administration's desires than the bill passed by the house, for the committee threw out some house provisions as a $125,000,000 contribution from the WPA to the FWA, the house's ban on the continuance of the federal theater, and a house stipulation that WPA be administered by a three-man board, instead of the present one-man administrator.

The senate bill requires, however, that 25 per cent of the cost of WPA projects be borne by the states or municipalities, that the federal theater continue only when locally sponsored, and retains a house limitation of $40,000 on the federal contribution to WPA building projects.

In addition, a house requirement that relief money be distributed upon a basis of population and unemployment was changed to a basis of need only. Another house provision calling for the discharge of WPA workers after 18 months on the rolls, was changed so that unemployed workers who have been certified for WPA work for three months but have not actually obtained work shall be given preference over those who have been on the rolls 18 months.

The bill appropriates $147,000,000 for WPA, $123,000,000 for the Farm Security Administration and $100,000,000 for the National Youth Administration, the figures approved by the house.

The certainty that the senate would approve some of these changes at the very least, and that consequently conferences with the house would be necessary before passage, led to preparations for emergency action should this or other appropriation bills fail to pass by Friday night.

House leaders were ready to submit a continuing resolution to carry on WPA at the present rate. They said they would introduce it some time Thursday, if it appeared then that the bill was in danger. Similar measures were planned as substitutes for other appropriation bills, should they seem endangered.

With a burst of speed, the senate approved a long series of amendments to the relief bill proposed by the appropriations committee, but finally bogged down in debate on the proposal to give certified WPA applicants preference over WPA workers who have been on the rolls 18 months. Attendance was lagging, and finally, just before 8 o'clock, Senator Austin, Republican, Vermont, suggested that more could be accomplished if the senate recessed and met early tomorrow.

Senator Barkley, Democrat, Kentucky, the majority leader, agreed, but announced that a night session was in store for tomorrow, unless the bill was disposed of sooner. He suggested that his colleagues "adjust" their "social calendars" accordingly.

There were caustic replies from Capitol Hill. "Petulant," was the way Senator Vandenberg, Republican, Michigan, described the President's remarks, while Senator McCarran, Democrat from Nevada, in the silver country, said: "What I think of the President's statement I'd not care to express."

Leaders Task Difficult. Some politicians at the capitol felt the eruption of hard feeling had complicated the already difficult task of administration leaders in congress. They are striving to get several major bills through before the "deadline," June 30, the end of the fiscal year. These bills include the WPA appropriation for next fiscal year, the farm appropriation for the same period, and the remains of the monetary bill. The latter includes an extension of the life of the $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund, with which the treasury buys and sells currencies to keep the dollar's relation to foreign money stable.

Fearing that the United States might be flooded with foreign silver in the next few days because treasury buying of such metal will stop June 30 under the senate monetary bill, Secretary Morgenthau announced today that he would pay only 40 cents an ounce, instead of 43 cents, as heretofore.

PRESS ROOM CHIEF STARTS 62D YEAR ON CONSTITUTION

This edition of The Constitution marks completion of 61 years of active printing of the newspaper by W. M. (Bill) Turner, press-room foreman.

The veteran, garbed in the uniform of his life's work, topped by a peaked cap and chewing his inevitable unlighted cigar, declared at midnight he hoped to print for many more years.

Starting under the editorship of the late Captain Evan P. Howell in 1878, he has missed but four weeks due to illness. He estimated last night he had taken part in the publication of 60,000 editions. Coworkers throughout The Constitution building were congratulating him this morning upon the beginning of his sixty-second year of service.

JOURNALIST-INTERN. EATONTON, Ga., June 27.—Thomas Park, University of Georgia journalism student, will serve his internship on the Eatonton Messenger here during the summer, it was announced today. Park is a brother of Hugh Park, now a member of the editorial staff of The Constitution.

sums, probably hundreds of millions. His face clouded when he noted a reporter had paused in his not-taking and he snapped an order to take it down whether or not his newspaper wanted to use it or not.

The United States, by buying foreign silver, has been buoying up the world price. Its action in cutting its price led immediately to a break of 1½ cents an ounce in the London market.

Wall Street security and commodity markets were quiet and uneven for the most part.

The Bank of Mexico and private banks suspended dealings in foreign exchange following the United States senate's vote to discontinue foreign silver purchases.

The central institution's notice to the other banks came during excited activity in financial circles, uncertain concerning the effect of Mexico's major industry, mining—and the future course of the peso.

"The Bank of Mexico has decided to suspend temporarily its participation in foreign exchange in order to conserve intact its metallic reserve until it is decided if the American government will be able to continue buying foreign silver," stated the bank's statement.

Converted to Dollars. During the morning there was tremendous activity in the exchange during which thousands of pesos were converted into dollars.

There was no indication how long the suspension, first since expropriation of oil industries March 18, 1938, would be in effect. Bankers believed some arrangement would be made in the next few days, but admitted that nothing was certain, particularly since the senate action was not final.

There was hope here some less sweeping arrangements would be worked out in conference committee.

Economists generally agreed that discontinuance of foreign silver purchases by the United States would be a disaster to the Mexican mining industry and that it would sharply curtail treasury income from export and production taxes.

Mexico has been shipping about 7,000,000 ounces of silver to the United States monthly at an average of 43 cents an ounce or about $3,000,000 monthly.

The import tax on this is about $200,000 with a production tax in addition.

HOUSE OPENS FIGHT ON NEUTRALITY BILL

Mild Debate Over Measure; Only Moderate Crowd Attracted.

WASHINGTON, June 27.—(AP)—The long-awaited debate on the administration's bill to revise the neutrality law began today in the house, where congressmen poured out thousands of words describing the measure variously as "a great step toward peace" and "a war-making bill."

For the most part, the discussion of the measure, which would do away completely with the present provision for an embargo on arms shipments to belligerents, was mild and attracted only a moderate crowd of listeners.

Representative Fish, of New York, ranking Republican on the foreign affairs committee, was its chief opponent. He called it "strictly an interventionist measure" and said its sole purpose was to force this country into an alliance with Great Britain.

On the other hand, Representative Eaton, of New Jersey, another Republican on the foreign affairs committee, asserted that he was "for the mangled remains of the bill."

That remark was the key, perhaps, to the mild tenor of debate. It referred to last-minute changes which the house Democratic leadership proposed to stave off rapidly developing opposition.

Wall Street security and commodity markets were quiet and uneven for the most part.

MAISIE'S STAND-IN IS TRACKED DOWN

William Mason Catches Little Rascal and Pockets $20 in Cash.

William Mason, of 2893 Andrews drive, politely but firmly "put the finger" on the designing little rascal known as "Maisie's Stand-in" at exactly 1:35 o'clock yesterday afternoon as she strolled about the Federal Reserve building, thereby laying claims to, and receiving, the reward of $20 in cash!

This explosive blonde menace is the forerunner of "Maisie" who will descend upon Atlanta Friday in an ardent campaign to break as many hearts as Hitler's henchmen have heads.

Starting out from Hollywood some weeks ago "Maisie" has played havoc with the husbands of the average American housewives and reduced the girl friends of as many boy friends to a state of romantic fitters. It is even whispered that Mickey Mouse is wishing Minnie was a blonde!

The Constitution, in a valiant effort to save the south from this devastating invasion, intended to put a stop to "Maisie's" campaigning in the person of the young lady captured yesterday. Unfortunately, by a writ of habeas corpus and other unfair tactics, "Maisie's Stand-in" is at large again and will be free to carry on her "blonde practices" again tomorrow between the hours of 12 and 8.

Information has it she will be in the downtown area.

Spot "Maisie's" confederate, touch her gently on the arm with your Constitution and say to her "Maisie's Stand-in."

Please leave town immediately. Do this, and provided you are right in your guess, there is a ten dollar cash prize awaiting you. If "Maisie's Stand-in" goes uncaptured tomorrow the prize on her head will be doubled.

TWO WPA OFFICERS TRANSFERRED HERE

Mississippi Administrator, Assistant Affected.

Two state officers in charge of work relief in Mississippi have been temporarily transferred to the regional WPA offices here in order to avoid possible charges of political activity in Mississippi's forthcoming primary campaign, it was announced yesterday by Colonel P. C. Harrington, WPA administrator.

The men transferred are Roland Wall, administrator, and George Parker, assistant administrator. They will be assigned to the staff of Malcolm Miller, director of region No. 5, with headquarters in the Candler building. No date has been set for the change.

VETS WARN AGAINST FUND SOLICITORS

Not Representatives of Legion, Officials Say.

American Legion officials yesterday warned Atlantans that persons soliciting funds on the streets and in office buildings for the alleged purpose of paying off the deficit of the Legion convention are not representatives of the Legion.

"One man wearing an overseas cap has been going around with a cigar box full of flags and insisting that he is selling them to pay off the Legion convention deficit, but I want to put Atlantans on notice he is not soliciting money for our organization," said A. L. Henson, member of the convention committee.

AUTO RACE OPENS LAKEWOOD CARD FOURTH OF JULY

Motorboat and Motorcycle Contests Also Slated; Taylor Entered.

Automobile races will open the "carnival of speed" program at Lakewood park July 4, it was announced Tuesday by Mike Benton, president of the Southeastern Fair Association, and sponsors of the big holiday race program.

Immediately following the first auto race, there will be a motorboat race on the lake with some of the best known speedboat pilots in the south participating.

A motorcycle race will follow just as soon as the motorboats pull into the docks.

It's the biggest race program ever attempted at Lakewood park and replaces the former auto races alone, in which there was much delay between races.

There will be no delay next week and immediately following the ending of one race, another will start. In that way there will be three events for each race program.

Time trials for the automobile race have been set for 11 o'clock Tuesday morning with the races starting at 3 o'clock.

Harley Taylor, three times state champion, and the southern champion last year is the first automobile race entry. He won the last Labor Day program at Lakewood and followed with another victory the next Sunday. Taylor is considering entering all three events.

"Speedy" Goff, Birmingham's gift to the roaring dirt tracks, has wired his entry and will pilot a Miller-Scofield he recently purchased for dirt track races.

Following the triple race program there will be a bathing beauty contest and a free fireworks program.

Well, anything can happen now. Tony Galento won't have to use his famous Newark nightstick on Joe Louis. He can knock him over with a feather. Why? Well, Joe Louis is from the deep south—Alabama. If southerners haven't got it in baseball, there is no reason why they should make very good fighters, would you think?

The estimable H. G. Salsinger (Detroit News), commenting generally on major league ball players hailing from the deep south, says—

"There isn't much doubt that Washington will finish deep in the second division and it would not be completely surprising if the Senators finished last."

"Why is Washington a losing team?" asks the customers.

"Because the team has too many southern ball players," answers one of the local newspapers. "Washington won't get anywhere until the club ignores the deep south in its search for talent. The southern ball player has mechanical ability, but that lets him out. He's listless, indolent, ambitionless. The only thing he's interested in is pay-day. He considers pay-day even more important than base hits."

"It is the first time, as far as we know, that the indictment against southern ball players has reached the public prints. It has been repeatedly made in private. One major league manager has gradually rid his roster of players who come from south of the Mason and Dixon line. He says that he will never again have a southerner on his team. His explanation:

"They're too hook-wormish."

"His opinion is privately shared by most of the major league rank and file. The prejudice against southerners as ball players is general."

"That southerners should have engendered this prejudice in recent years is strange because the greatest ball player of all time came from the deep south. He had more fire, zest, verve, ambition, speed, initiative, aggressiveness and unflagging zeal than any player of his time, or since his time. Tyrus Raymond Cobb was the direct antithesis of the southern ball player of today."

Will somebody please remind Bill Dickey he was born in Louisiana and raised in Arkansas? And that he has no business being such a figure with the New York Yankees because he is probably suffering from hookworm? And please tell Atley Donald, Luke Appling, Johnny Mize, Whitlow Wyatt, Buddy Lewis, Cecil Travis, Rudy York, Gee Walker, Jim Tabor, Mel Ott, Joe Moore and all the others from the deep south—to name a few—to come on home; all is forgiven.

TONY HAS ONE ANSWER.

Two-Ton Tony Galento, the cheerful little Bearful, will clamber into the ring at Yankee stadium tonight for that "Three strikes, you're out" fight with Joe Louis, and Tony, who isn't seeking a last-minute reprieve from the guillotine, says "Louis isn't a 'superhuman man' and I will knock him out."

Tony has one answer. Louis isn't superhuman. His record proves that beyond a doubt, as follows:

1—Max Schmeling knocked him out. (What happened the second time?)

2—Jim Braddock knocked him down. (But who won?)

3—Jorge Brescia staggered him. (But what did Louis do to him?)

4—Nathan Mann staggered him. (After that, it was Oh, Mann!)

5—Jim Roper hit him a good shot in the first round. (Roper didn't appear for the second round.)

6—Tommy Farr went the limit. (Louis won, and what is Farr doing for a living today?)

7—Natie Brown went the limit. (Natie did not win and does anyone happen to know what his occupation is right now?)

8—Bob Pastor went the limit (on a bicycle. Louis hit him with everything but the ring post whenever he caught up with him.)

9—Patsy Perroni went the limit. (And Louis still remains heavyweight champion.)

Tony, as said, has it all figured out Louis isn't superhuman, but what about Tony? Has he taken careful stock of himself to find out why he is such a tough knocker?

The Cheerful Little Bearful has one answer, but I'm afraid he hasn't got around to the real answer. And that is, he hasn't ever beaten anybody that entitles him to fight for a world's title.

To use his own words—"that bum!"

Why, Bearcat Obie won a 10-round decision over him several years ago. Galento and Johnny Risko were on the supporting card of the Schemling-Stribling fight at Cleveland. Risko long since has retired, but Galento is still around. There is really no way of telling how old he is.

If he has been able to figure out Louis isn't superhuman—which he probably didn't do by himself—I wonder what Louis has figured out about Galento? It will be interesting to listen in tonight and learn just how level this latest "world's heavyweight championship" fight really is.

Ferdinand's Corner: A letter which came in the mail yesterday is proof that all is serene once again in our fair village.

The writer, J. W. Harris, of College Park, criticized this writer for supporting Manager Paul Richards some time ago in what appeared to everyone in the press box a justified complaint on an umpire's decision at first base. . . . When a fan can't find anything wrong with the Crackers and has to go back and try to hang something on a writer, everything is all right. . . .

Silliest and most absurd rumor concerning baseball that ever spread around this town concerns a mythical fight between Paul Richards and Jack Bolling. . . . Some even went so far as to say it came up over a dispute in a card game. . . . Paul Richards does

AMERICAN GIRLS TAKE MATCHES IN EASY FASHION

Helen Jacobs and Alice Marble Win Without Removing Sweaters.

WIMBLEDON, England, June 27.—(AP)—America's five girls slipped through the opening round of the all-England tennis championships today without even getting their noses shiny.

Helen Hull Jacobs didn't even have to shed her yellow sweater to beat Mrs. R. E. Haylock, 6-0, 6-2, on the center court before Queen Mother Mary. Alice Marble simply overwhelmed Mrs. J. S. Kirk, 6-3, 6-2. She, too, wore her "lucky" pink sweater throughout the match.

Mrs. Sarah Palfrey Fabyan, the most graceful player in the field, toe-danced past Miss M. G. N. Norman at 6-2, 6-2; Gracyn Wheeler, of Santa Monica, Cal., beat Betty Nuthall, who won in 1931 at Forest Hills, 7-5, 2-6, 6-2, and Mrs. Dorothy Andrus, of Stamford, Conn., eliminated Miss J. Goss, 6-3, 7-5.

Miss Marble on the court is simply terrific. She's undoubtedly got more shots than any woman in the world and, if she can resist the temptation to knock the cover off the ball, nobody outside of, say, Miss Jacobs, is going to give her much trouble.

Helen herself is a picture. Off the court she is trim, intelligent, poised and soft-spoken. On the court she's the same old Helen—quick and methodical but limited by an incurable slice on her forehead. That slow slice may beat her, and if it does, a lot of people around here will be mighty sorry.

Gene Hasson Rejoins Club In Fortnight

MONTREAL, N. Y., June 27.—(AP) Gene Hasson, 24, first baseman for Montreal, of the International baseball league, whose skull was fractured when he was hit by a pitched ball Memorial Day, is going home tonight.

"He has a 100 per cent recovery, so far as we can tell, and plans to resume playing ball about the middle of July," his physician, Dr. Elmer Milch, said today.

"Nobody could be more surprised than I at his rapid and remarkable recovery."

Dr. Milch said Hasson planned to spend two weeks at his home in Connelville, Pa., before returning to baseball, and that he had advised the young athlete to "hunt or fish, or anyway, to relax" for at least 10 days.

Hasson joined Montreal the day before he was injured, being sent up from Nashville, Tenn., of the Southern association.

He played with the Philadelphia Athletics during 1937, and briefly in 1938, before being sent to Columbus, Ohio, of the American association.

Hasson, who was hit by a ball thrown by Ray Roche, Buffalo pitcher and a personal friend of long standing, said he expected to start working out with the Pirates at Pittsburgh, 50 miles from his home, "in about two weeks."

"Burleigh Grimes (Montreal manager) has told me to take things easy until I feel right, but I guess I'll be back in Montreal before the end of July," he added.

MRS. W. D. TUMLIN IN SEMI-FINALS

Mrs. W. D. Tumlin, defending champion, led East Lake women golfers into the semi-finals of the club championship tournament yesterday by turning back Mrs. Paul Hudson, 5-4.

Other quarter-final results saw Miss Llewellyn Wilburn beat Mrs. W. H. Vaughan, 4-3; Mrs. J. C. Wright gain the semi-finals by nosing out Mrs. W. D. Doak, 2-1, and Miss Grace Moore advance with a 6-4 victory over Mrs. O. E. Kearney.

Mrs. Tumlin meets Miss Wilburn and Mrs. Wright opposes Miss Moore in today's semifinal round.

Quarter-final results in the first flight were as follows:

Mrs. R. C. Porter won via default from Mrs. F. A. Lyon and Mrs. Frank Freeman won in the same manner from Mrs. O. B. Keeler; Miss Violet Simmons beat Mrs. L. H. Kelly, 4-3, and Mrs. C. Sloan won from Mrs. C. D. Fields, 2 up.

PETERS DOUBLES WITH THREE MEN ON BASE IN FIFTH

Jennings Poindexter Wins First Game as Atlanta Sweeps Series.

By JACK TROY.
The Crackers ended a perfect home stand yesterday afternoon and then rushed off to catch a train for New Orleans where to-night they hope to keep their winning streak unbroken.

Final game of the Baron series was a virtual rout. The Crackers scored six runs in the fifth inning to win, 8 to 4. Jennings Poindexter, who looked much improved, won his first start for the Crackers.

Henry Johnson, who had been ill for several days, retired of the fourth inning with the score tied at two-all and Hobo Carson, who replaced him, was the losing pitcher.

The victory gave the Crackers four in a row over the Barons, who return home to celebrate the centennial year of baseball. Chattanooga is to be their opponent. So there appears to be no rest for the weary.

GREAT HOME STAND.
The Crackers opened their home stand by taking both games of the New Orleans series and they move into New Orleans with a string of six straight victories. Luman Harris is scheduled to pitch to-night.

Three games are scheduled in New Orleans and two in Birmingham. The Crackers return Monday to play Chattanooga.

The Barons again outthit the Crackers yesterday, 10 to 6, but again the Crackers proved the most potent club in the pinch.

Poindexter allowed a couple of runs in the second inning. Crouch walked, Arkeeta singled and Ogorek also singled, scoring

Leo Savage Loses Bout Via a Foul

2,000 Watch Daniel Boone on Rampage; Roche, Piers Draw.

Daniel Boone Savage, the mammoth Kentucky hillbilly, lost the match, but he had to carry the lifeless forms of his opponent, Babe Zaharias, and referee Tony Ruff, out of the ring last night before a roaring throng of 2,000 wild-eyed fans at Warren athletic field.

Daniel Boone allowed as how he was being wronged and proved that once aroused he is all they say he is—240 pounds of man-eater.

After six minutes of tussling, Savage appeared to have the crowd-baiting Greek pinned in the first fall. However, Ruff, apparently ruling that Zaharias was partly out of the ropes, patted Daniel Boone's shoulders for a break. The Kentucky giant thought he had won and walked to his corner. Zaharias nabbed him from behind and pinned the backwoodsman.

Daniel Boone was fit to be tied. He lost no time waylaying Zaharias with knees and fists when action was resumed. But Ruff disqualified him after Savage had bear-hugged the Greek into submission, awarding the match to Zaharias. Then the bearded man mountain went to work on Ruff, kicking him all over the ring. Police leaped in and stopped the slaughter. Daniel Boone had lost the battle, but won the war.

A blistering hour duel that went the limit saw Dorv Roche and Henry Piers go to a hard-fought draw, each winning a fall. The heat got Piers as he walked to his dressing room following the second fall, the Hollander tumbled on the turf but he was revived and came back to stay the route.

Alf Johnson pinned Bill Lee in 14 minutes to open the card.

Free Mat Show Offers Gunther Vs. Mike Cassidy

The only thing cheap about tomorrow night's light heavyweight and junior heavyweight wrestling card at Warren athletic field is the price. There is no admission fee, tax or collection. The show is absolutely free. But the matches are first-class.

Hoping to attract more fans than ever watched a card featuring principals below the heavyweight class in Atlanta, Matchmaker Warren has signed Bullet Joe Gunther for a defense of his southern junior heavy title against rugged Mike Cassidy.

The Red Shadow, mysterious masked figure, makes his second appearance in as many weeks, opposing Sailor Al Olsen in the semi-final.

Carlos Rodriguez, the Mexican madcap, meets Al Sazzy, another newcomer in the open at 8:30 o'clock. If it rains, the program will be staged indoors at Warren Arena.

BYRON NELSON WINS TOURNEY

WORCESTER, Mass., June 27.—(P)—Byron Nelson, national open golf champion, won the Massachusetts open title today with a 72-hole score of 283, the lowest in the tourney's history. He finished 5 strokes ahead of Lloyd Mangrum, of Los Angeles, who closed strong with a 2-69 on 68.

Horton Smith, of Chicago, finished third with 289, after carding a 69 on his last round, and Tony Manero, of Salem, 1936 national open titlist, was fourth with 290.

Billy Gillespie Gains Net Quarter-Finals

ORANGE, N. J., June 27.—(P)—Martin Buxby, of Miami, Fla., advanced today to the quarter-final round of the New Jersey state men's singles tennis championship on a 6-4, 6-2 victory over John H. Curtis, of Thaca, N. Y.

Three others, William Gillespie, of Atlanta; Louis Brownstein, of the Du Pont Country Club, and Richard McKee, of Miami Beach, Fla., moved up with second-seeded Buxby to fill out the round of eight.

Gillespie was the only one to run into trouble, beating William V. Winslow, of South Orange, 6-3, 2-6, 6-1. Brownstein halted Robert Kerdasha, of Woodcliff, 6-1, 6-2, and McKee scored a 6-2, 6-1 victory over Charles Rider, of Malverne, L. I.

N'WESTERN STAR CAPTURES MEDAL IN COLLEGE GOLF

Richardson's 144 Three Strokes Ahead in National Collegiate.

By GEORGE S. MILLS.

DES MOINES, Iowa, June 27.—(P)—Sid Richardson, of Northwestern, boss of Big Ten golf throughout his undergraduate days, added the national collegiate medal title to his collection today with a brilliant 144, three strokes under his nearest opponent.

Even his subpar 71 on the second 18 of the qualifying round today, however, failed to save the team title for the Wildcats.

Stanford, defending champion, clicked again in foursome competition with 612 strokes, two less than Northwestern in second place and three under Iowa in third position.

Richardson, who won two Big Ten championships and finished second to his teammate, Charles E. Fannon, this year, today shot one of the three-under-par rounds turned in during two days of qualifying play. His 71, one under perfect figures, offset a "one over" 73 performance yesterday to give him even par for the qualifying round.

Trailing by three strokes at 147 was Warren Berl, Stanford sophomore, who shot himself a red-hot 70 today. Joint holders of the 148 bracket were John Selby, of Princeton, and Tom Sheehan, of Notre Dame.

Besides Richardson and Berl, only Ted Meister, of Yale, solved Wakonda's winding fairways and tricky greens in less than 72 shots. His 71 today gave him a 36-hole total of 149, fifth position, which he shared with three others.

Tulane Accused of "Stealing" Western Reserve Grid Prospects

CLEVELAND, June 27.—(P)—"Big Bill" Edwards, Western Reserve University gridiron mentor, today attacked what he called "campus stealing" of football talent, centering his fire on southern universities.

"It is a matter of common knowledge," Edwards charged, "that a good many southern colleges are going hog-wild in their offers to high school stars. Any coach can tell you about it."

"Unless the coaches set up a noisy squawk," said Edwards, "other schools will raid us year after year—and we're left holding an empty sack."

Edwards accused Assistant Coach Bill Bevan, of Tulane, and an "unidentified representative" of Carnegie Tech (at Pittsburgh) of enticing "two of my best freshmen backfield prospects" to abandon plans and enroll at Reserve.

The coach said Steve Belichick, of Struthers, Ohio, his first string fullback, disclosed that Bevan tried to win Paul Anderson, of Struthers, over to Tulane, but lost him to Carnegie Tech's emissary.

"But," added Edwards, "two Tulane coaches attended Tech's High school graduation exercises at Struthers and took Walter McDonald, another of my prospects, to New Orleans the next day."

Edwards was nettled especially by Anderson's case because, he said, Anderson had been working at Reserve since February "and a representative of Tulane actually invaded our campus to take him away—the job was done by Bill Bevan."

Edwards expressed the belief that "campus-stealing" is increasing generally.

in a disqualification, despite the so-called "no foul rule," and (3) that Galento's request for Arthur Donovan as referee would have no bearing on the commission's selection of the arbiter, General Phelan added:

"You may hear of the gimmick again later." (This was taken to mean the general might bring the subject up at the weigh-in and instruction period for the two fighters at noon tomorrow.)

The ticket sale continued brisk throughout this fight eve, and Promoter Mike Jacobs, although his rose-colored hopes of a million-dollar gate have long since been abandoned, saw the possibility of a $500,000 house if the not play cards on road trips. . . And someone would have carried some marks had there been a fight. . . This corner has said before and will repeat that the sale of Bolling is the greatest thing that ever could have happened. . . Certainly Bolling and Earl Mann didn't have a "fight," too. . . President Mann transacted the trade—plus cash—of Bolling to the Phillies for Poindecker and, I dare say, the right-thinking fans were happy about it. . . It happens to be true that Bolling asked, in the thick of the 1938 pennant fight, to be sent somewhere. . . He didn't like to play for Atlanta. . . All during the '38 season, teammates cajoled and kidded him into hustling. . . The WHOLE TROUBLE was that Bolling could not understand salary limits. He wanted a major league salary with a minor league team. . . And that, as they say, is that. . . Unusual thing in the Southern league is that there are four boys, all from the same home town, on three different teams. . . They're Richards, Atlanta; Al Williams and Ted Pritchett, Chattanooga, and Adair, Birmingham, all from Waxahachie, Texas. . . Walter Stewart (Commercial Appeal) says a boy from Atlanta has the best name for a tennis player he knows of. . . The boy is Straiton Hard. . . Gabbo Gabler once had Pancho Snyder and Adolpho Luque in such a rage they wouldn't speak to him for the rest of the season. . . Gabbo had heard Luque say he never made a bad pitch and Snyder declare he had never called for the wrong pitch. . . So when questions were raised as to "what is wrong with the Giants?" Gabbo had the answer. . . He told Syd Mercer that he could take the coaches, Snyder and Luque, and win a pennant. . . Gabbo also wants to know why there are no common Indians in baseball. . . It seems they're all called Chief. . . Wouldn't it be a funny thing if Chief Bender, still being scouted for the Athletics, should recommend that Connie Meek buy back Russ Peters? . . . It might happen. . . Druid Hills will hold the monthly losers' pay tourney today and a good time will be had by all.

expected last-minute rush materializes. Something between $350,000 and $450,000 would appear to be more like it, however.

Louis, his training ending on a fine boxing display yesterday, took things easy today. But the beer-swilling Galento, unorthodox to the end, surprised everyone by going through 12 rounds of work in a gymnasium in Newark, where he drove from his Summit (N. J.) camp. Although he did no sparring, he went through five rounds of bag-punching and seven of shadow boxing and rope skipping. Then he added a brief "secret" session in the Orange Y. M. C. A. UNUSUAL KEYNOTE.

Just to finish off on the same unusual keynote, he'll do seven miles of roadwork tomorrow morning, and then retire to count the cash registers in his bar in Orange. Promptly at 7 p. m., he's going to turn it over to his bartender, and say simply: "I've got a date in Yankee stadium tonight, so you handle this for a couple of hours till I get back." There are many who believe if Tony gets back at all that eve-

CRACKERS

Crouch, Clancy rolled to Poindecker and, instead of throwing home to nip Arkegeta, Jennings threw out Clancy instead. It appeared he wanted to donate the baffled Barons a run.

The Crackers evened the score in their half. Burge walked and went out attempting to steal. Peters walked. Rubeling singled to right, sending Peters to third, and Richards singled, with Peters scoring. Rubeling stopped at third and then scored on Poindecker's outfield sacrifice.

CARSON GOES IN.

Johnson retired after taking his bat in the fourth and Carson held on until the fifth, which was a wild and woolly inning.

Richards started it off with a single. Poindecker hit to Arkegeta, and the Chief threw wild at second. Sperry singled to center. Richards scored and Sperry went to second when Glynn "throw" hit Richards and bounced away from Crouch. Poindecker took third and scored on Rucker's outfield sacrifice. Mauldin bounced a roller to Arkegeta and Sperry was thrown out at the plate. Mauldin stole second. Mailho and Burge walked. Then Peters socked a double over Luce's head, scoring Mauldin, Mailho and Burge. Delsavio let Rubeling's grounder go through him and so did Glynn. Peters scored on the double.

The Barons got a run in the sixth on Dunlap's double, a long fly which enabled Dunlap to take third and an infield out on which Dunlap tallied.

They secured their fourth and final run in the seventh. Clancy singled, stole second and scored on Delsavio's single.

RICHARDS HITS TWICE.

Manager Richards was the only Cracker getting as many as two hits. Luce, Dunlap and Clancy each got two for the Barons. But Poindecker wasn't giving them many hits when they counted. In the third, for instance, the Barons got three hits and didn't score. Delsavio lined into a double play.

The Crackers look the part of a championship ball club now. Emil Mailho was back in right field yesterday and, while he got no hits, his mere presence was inspiring. The outfield of Mauldin, Rucker and Mailho is right potent.

By winning again yesterday, the Crackers gained a full game on Knoxville, the fourth-place club, and half a game on the idle Chattanooga Lookouts. They are now only three games out of second place and only three and one-half games behind the leading Memphis Chickies.

JAPANESE CLAIM BIG AIR VICTORY

Report Destroying 120 Soviet Planes in 2 Outer Mongolia Raids.

TOKYO, June 27.—(AP)—A sweeping victory over Soviet Russia air forces in Outer Mongolia was reported tonight in Japanese dispatches which said 120 enemy airplanes were destroyed in two spectacular battles near the Manchukuo frontier.

Advices from Hsinking, capital of Japanese-dominated Manchukuo, told for the first time of a Japanese aerial invasion either of Soviet Siberian or of Russian-dominated Mongolian territory in the long series of battles between Russia and Japan in the Far East.

They did not disclose the Japanese forces or their losses. Since May 20 Japanese have reported the destruction of 251 Soviet-Mongolian warplanes in fighting along the troubled frontier.

The Hsinking dispatches reported the greatest Japanese triumph today when, they said, 104 planes were shot down or destroyed on the ground in a raid by a Japanese air armada on a Mongolian base at Tamsk (Tamskum), 62 miles south of Lake Bor on the Outer Mongolia-Manchukuo border.

The Kwantung army, Japan's Manchukuo garrison, reported the other battle. It said Japanese fliers encountered 40 Soviet EE-14 and EE-15 type warplanes late Monday and shot down 16.

Surprised by Size of Force.

The army's communique quoted a Japanese flier as saying the Japanese were "surprised at the size of the Soviet-Mongolian forces" but that "it was marvelous to see so many enemy airmen go down to hell."

(In Moscow, Soviet Russians appeared not greatly excited by the reported air battles. According to their reports, the Japanese-Manchukuo planes have suffered heavy losses and the Soviet-Mongolian squadrons only small losses in the intermittent fighting.)

(Two paragraphs on inside pages of Moscow newspapers suffice today for accounts of an air battle in which Russian reports said 25 Japanese combat planes were shot down.)

The only statement of Japanese losses was that three planes had not returned to their base.

Mrs. Cardwell, Mrs. Harris Named Members of Peachtree Garden Club

By Sally Forth.

THE names of Mrs. Bickerton Cardwell and Mrs. Arthur L. Harris Jr. were added to the membership roster of the Peachtree Garden Club at the meeting held Monday at the Brookhaven drive residence of Mrs. Cyrus Strickler Jr. The junior group is composed of daughters of some senior members, and these young women are fast becoming familiar with the horticultural projects of the club. In all probability in years to come, these youthful juniors will shoulder the responsibility of promoting the worth-while activities connected with the organization.

Mrs. Cardwell is the former Marion Calhoun, daughter of Mrs. Phinizy Calhoun, first president of the club. Her marriage to Mr. Cardwell, member of prominent Virginia families, transferred her residence to Alexandria, where she lived for several years. Only last week, Mr. and Mrs. Cardwell and their little three-year-old daughter, Marion Calhoun Cardwell, moved to Atlanta from Virginia, and are being welcomed by their legion of admiring friends.

Mrs. Harris is the daughter-in-law of Mrs. Arthur L. Harris, a valuable member of the Peachtree Garden Club, who has done so much to promote the success of the horticultural activities of the organization. She is the former Carol Well, of Montgomery, Ala., and belongs to well-known and influential Alabama families. Her marriage brought her to Atlanta and through her gracious and charming manner, Mrs. Harris has made lots of friends in her adopted home. She is a devotee of horticulture and takes great interest in the lovely flowers growing in the garden at the rear of the Harris home on Ponce de Leon avenue in Druid Hills.

AN ATTRACTIVE group of Washington Seminary girls will celebrate America's independence quite ironically under the flag of Great Britain in Bermuda. The girls leave today for New York to sail tomorrow on the S. S. Rotterdam for the picturesque British colony in the Atlantic.

Mrs. Aubrey Fisher, the beloved study hall teacher at the seminary, will chaperone the girls, who include Elise Dunnick, Jacquelyn Smith, Christine Jensen, Mary Alice Clark and Anita Peavy. Also in the party will be Mrs. James J. Clark and Miss Inez Kitchens, of Marietta.

Their visit in Bermuda will be crowded with all manner of good times so suggestive of the colony life, and will be in unusual contrast to the climax of the tour which will be a visit to the New York World's Fair. Upon their return to the States, the party will be joined by Mrs. J. D. Stewart, Mr. and Mrs. J. Tom Smith and Mrs. H. W. McLarty. Elsie Dunnick plans a visit at the national capital before she returns to Atlanta, and Mrs. Clark and Mary Alice will go to Olean, N. Y., for a visit with relatives.

DETAILS of the recent precedent-breaking visit of England's King and Queen to America will never cease to be of interest. Among the most revealing personal accounts of their majesties' sojourn in the nation's capital is that told to Sally by Mrs. A. L. Ford, wife of Congressman Ford and popular Washington matron. Mrs. Ford, who recalls, is the former Gertrude Castellow, daughter of Georgia's former Congressman Bryant T. Castellow. Although her marriage last year to the Mississippi representative took her to Washington for residence, she frequently visits her aunt, Mrs. L. O. Freeman, and her cousin, Mrs. W. L. Curtis, in College Park.

Mrs. Ford writes that she enjoyed a "splendid view" of the impressive arrival parade honoring the King and Queen, and that she and her husband attended the beautiful garden party given at the British embassy for their royal highnesses. As you know, formal attire predominated at this affair, where ladies donned long afternoon gowns and picture hats, and gentlemen wore cutaways, gray-striped trousers, Ascot ties and top hats. Sally surmises that Mrs. Ford was a much admired figure on this occasion, wearing a gypsy-striped skirt, a white embroidered blouse with a white picture hat and white accessories.

The popular young matron waxes enthusiastic when their majesties are mentioned. She found Queen Elizabeth "much prettier and slimmer than the photographs," and states that her royal highness possesses a "schoolgirl complexion," dark brown hair, blue eyes, and "an exquisite neck and shoulders."

According to Mrs. Ford, the King is a slender man of medium height, possessing reddish brown hair, and a becoming tan. Sally hears that the most colorful figure at the party, however, was a Catholic cardinal robed in a brilliant red taffeta cloak and matching cap.

Congressman and Mrs. Ford had the honor to be presented to the royal pair at a White House musical assembly of a select group of Washington notables. Although society courted to England's popular ruler at the garden party, they shook hands with the honor guests in typically American fashion at the musical.

A varied program of music included numbers by negro spiritual singers, four mountain girls with lusty voices, a doleful cowboy dressed in a business suit, and a group of high school students who rendered folk dances similar to the "stomp." Highlighting the program were songs sung by radio's "mountainous" Kate Smith, gifted Marion Anderson and by the inimitable Lawrence Tibbett.

News of Society In Decatur, Ga. Mrs. W. O. Anderson will be hostess for the members of her luncheon-bridge club at her home in Decatur. Present will be Mesdames Candler Murphy, C. R. Shumate, Thomas Collins, Laurence Everhart, George Pennington, Roy G. Jones and the hostess.

Mrs. N. B. Harrison, Mrs. Ike Aiken and sons, Ike Jr. and Harrison, of Brunswick, were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Walker this week.

Mrs. Wallace Kirkpatrick, of Miami Beach, is visiting Mrs. T. A. Branch Sr. Mr. and Mrs. John Rustin and children, Mary Virginia Wallace and Emily, of Washington, D. C., are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. George S. Watts for several weeks. Mrs. John Montgomery will entertain a small group of friends today at luncheon and bridge.

Mrs. Russell Leonard is spending a month in Texas. Mr. and Mrs. Candler Murphy and son, Pat, have returned from a trip to Washington and New York.

Mrs. Richmond Nyman and children left recently for their home in New Haven, Conn., after spending several weeks with Mr. and Mrs. Charles DuVal.

Mr. and Mrs. Leon O'Neal are spending ten days at Lakemont. Miss Alyce Walker returned Monday to Athens, where she is attending the summer school at the university.

Garden Club Plans To Form Library

At the recent meeting of Kennesaw Home and Garden Club, which met with Mrs. A. Lipshutz on Ponce de Leon avenue, plans were completed for composing a library on flowers.

Mrs. W. N. Blankenship, president, will develop a book on panicles; Mrs. W. F. Hollingsworth, flower shrubs; Mrs. W. M. Blanton, gladioli; Mrs. A. M. Adams, dahlias; Mrs. T. W. Rowland, sweet peas; Mrs. Hines Hill, petunias; Mrs. A. Lipshutz, tulips; Mrs. Louis Williams, poppies; Mrs. E. Stewart, iris; Mrs. Ralph Martin, roses; Mrs. J. J. Betts, snapdragons; Mrs. W. Fletcher, regals; Mrs. Homer Hunt, thrift and rock plants.

The club meets in September with Mrs. Ralph Martin.

Bridge Section Meets

The bridge section of Atlanta Woman's Club meets this morning at 10:30 o'clock. The hostesses for the session will be Mesdames Anthony Addy and George Stanley.

After bridge, luncheon will be served by the club, Mrs. Shelverton, president, announced. A morning bridge session will be held every fourth Wednesday.

MR. AND MRS. PHILIP HENRY ALSTON JR.

Church Ceremony Is Followed By Reception at Driving Club

Fashionable members of Atlanta society and many prominent out-of-town guests gathered at St. Luke's Episcopal church last evening at 6 o'clock for the marriage of Miss Margaret Elkin Goddard, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Newton Goddard, and Philip Henry Alston Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Philip H. Alston, which was an important event of the summer season.

Reverend John Moore Walker, rector of the church, officiated. As the guests were assembling and during the ceremony, a program of music was presented on the organ by Charles Sheldon.

Church Decorations. The interior of the handsome church was adorned with rich greenery and lilies arranged with dignified simplicity. Palms and ferns graced either side of the altar, and silhouetted against the foliage were eight cathedral candelabra holding gleaming white burning tapers. Altar vases held arrangements of Easter lilies. The choir loft was banked with palms and ferns and at the entrance to the chancel were pedestals filled with lilies. Smaller baskets filled with lilies marked the entrance of every second pew down the center aisle. A large basket of lilies and other white flowers was placed over the doorway at the entrance of the church. Garlanded of smilax outlined the balcony and extended in graceful lines from the basket arrangement.

Acting as ushers were Thomas K. Glenn, George A. Nicolson, Sam Dorsey, Spencer Waddell, of Columbia, Robert Woodruff, of Wilmington, Del., and Eugene Kelly, of Toronto, Canada.

Mrs. Stanton Watts Pickens, of Charlotte, N. C., the former Miss Mary Goddard, was her sister's matron of honor and only attendant. She was a beautifully gowned in cream-colored mouseline de soie, fashioned with tight bodice and long full skirt, the skirt being made of several layers of the material and achieving a bouffant effect. The waist line was marked by a grass green sash, the vivid shade being repeated in her small mouseline turban. She carried a shower bouquet of pink bouvardia.

Radiant Bride. The lovely bride was accompanied to the altar by her father, John N. Goddard, by whom she was given in marriage and they were met at the altar by the groom and his brother, James Alston, who was best man.

A petite and beautiful brunette, the bride presented a picture of exquisite loveliness in her wedding gown of filmy white tulle posed over a foundation of handsome satin-back crepe. The neck line was outlined with a narrow band of white satin, and the long full skirt widened to form a train several yards in length. Her finger-tip veil fell in graceful folds from an effective lace bow caught to her dark hair on top of her head.

The bride carried a shower bouquet of white bouvardia. Mrs. Goddard, the bride's mother, was gowned in a model of gray chiffon made along becoming lines, and her small, flowered turban was of harmonizing shades. She wore a shoulder cluster of lilies of the valley. Mrs. Philip Alston, the room's mother, chose for the occasion a model of beige lace over a slip of taffeta. Her hat matched her gown and she wore a cluster of orchids.

Reception at Club. After the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Goddard entertained at an alfresco reception at the Piedmont Driving Club. Forming a receiving line were the bride and groom, Mr. and Mrs. Alston, and the wedding party. They stood on the terrace before a background of palms and ferns, which was guarded at either side by tall white Grecian urns filled with white gladioli.

The interior of the club was adorned with rich greenery and on the console table was an arrangement of white gladioli, palms and fern used in the foyer. Palms were grouped under the arches down either side of the ballroom, and white gladioli formed the centerpiece for the mantel. The buffet tables placed on the terrace were centered with effective steeple arrangements of white roses, lilies of the valley and baby's breath. Individual tables placed around the outer side of the terrace were centered with pastel flowers.

The bride's table was placed on the east porch of the club and was covered with a white satin cloth. Milk glass bowls formed a straight line down the center of the table and were filled with gardenias, swainsons, lilies of the valley and maiden hair fern.

Miss Kathryn Newman kept the bride's book. An orchestra provided music during the evening. Mr. Alston and his bride left for Bermuda for their wedding trip, and upon their return they will form prominent additions to Atlanta's younger married contingent.

The bride chose for traveling a smart model of blue and white crepe with hat to match.

Out-of-Town Guests. Out-of-town guests attending the marriage were Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Pickens, Mr. and Mrs. Stanton Pickens, of Charlotte, N. C.; Miss Mims Thompson, of New York; Mrs. James O. Lewis, grandmother of the groom; Mr. and Mrs. Fletcher Jordan, brother and sister of the groom; Mr. and Mrs. William Webster, uncle and aunt of the groom, all of Greenville, S. C.; and Mrs. Alwyn Lewis, Dr. and Mrs. Fletcher Jordan, Thomas L. Lewis, also of Greenville, S. C.; Mrs. Louise Alston Adams, of Montgomery, Ala.; Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Waddell, Spencer Waddell, Dr. and Mrs. William Young, Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Swift Jr., Robert Dismukes, all of Columbus; Robert Woodruff, of Wilmington, Del.; Eugene Kelly, of Toronto, Canada; Miss Margaret Chenoweth, Dr. Beach Chenoweth and William Chenoweth, all of Birmingham, Alabama.

Preceding the Goddard-Alston wedding, Mr. and Mrs. Philip H. Alston, parents of the groom, complimented the bride party at a breakfast given at Brookhaven, the Capital City Country Club. Breakfast was served on the terrace overlooking the lake, and the table was beautified with three plateaus composed of pastel-shaded flowers.

The hosts were assisted in entertaining by their mother, Mrs. J. O. Lewis, of Greenville, S. C., and their sisters, Mrs. Rhodes Perdue, Mrs. Kendrick Goldsmith and Mrs. William Webster, of Greenville, S. C.

Perfume That Causes You To Forget Your Cares

By LILLIAN MAE.

Yes, it's too hot to worry about anything unnecessary. So why shouldn't a perfume or cologne, the very name of which indicates the folly of "bothering," be just the very article?

When the handsome suede-like box arrived in my office and I lifted the top and saw the frosted, flask-shaped bottle with the green liquid peeping through the latticed-effect sides, my curiosity was very keen.

Then when I poured a bit on my wrists just to see whether it would really cause cares to float away, my assistants in the next office began to sniff and then to make personal investigation. Well, I know to whose collection the unique bottle will become an addition, and I'm fearful as to how far I will have to stretch the contents. They were charmed and—well—I felt for a time that their cares, including their work for the day, would be sidetracked.

Seriously, it is a very delightful light odor, suiting particularly well for summer. It's made by one of the French perfumers whose name stands for the very best. And yet it isn't as expensive as the name would indicate.

The cologne is very lasting, as attested by the many inquiries that were made by visitors to this office on that day when the girls all had to have their own temples and wrists anointed. The men particularly seemed to be intrigued—to the extent that several wives are now proud possessors of either the perfume or cologne.

If you like good fragrance and an attractive package for yourself, you'll adore this. Or if you want to make someone a very lovely gift, this will be very gratefully received by a bride-to-be, the girl friend having a birthday, a sick person—or just anyone, in fact. If you'll phone me, I'll tell you the name and where it may be purchased. If you do not live in Atlanta, write me, enclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope for reply.

Woman's Quiz

Q. I would like to know the best way to carry my month-old baby when we go to my mother's farm for week ends.

A. Get a large market basket with double handles which may be laid back. A substantial kapok pillow with a folded mattress pad should be used. This may be the baby's bed for several months. The basket should ride on the floor of the auto to avoid upsetting in case the car is stopped suddenly.

Q. What kind of vinegar should be used for pickling onions and cauliflower so that they will retain their white color?

A. White vinegar.

Q. How many persons require hospital care annually in the United States?

A. In 1938, one person in every 14.

Easy to Forfeit Your Child's Confidence

By Caroline Chatfield.

In conversation with a young mother the other day she remarked that she was devotedly thankful not to have the problem of an old-for-her-age daughter which so many of her friends were wrestling with. "I'm sure," she said, "I wouldn't have the courage to deny my child the privileges that her friends were having—that is if she asked for them. Fortunately she hasn't a thought of boys yet though some of her friends are plainly boy struck."

"Are you sure," she was asked, "that your little girl isn't holding out on you? Are you sure that she and her chums don't get their heads together and whisper of what this boy said to the teacher and what the teacher said back to him. Are you sure she isn't agonizing over the fact that her chums have a running start on her? Maybe timidity with you is tiring her tongue. But no, the mother was quite sure such suppositions were foolish.

She was believing what she wanted to believe and instead of bringing the school children to her home for games and fun, letting boys and girls play together as children she was preening herself on her good fortune in not being bothered. She was forfeiting a grand opportunity to be her child's best friend and confidant. Contentious in all? Yes, but dumb.

Not so much can be said for the mother of this 16-year-old girl who writes: "My problem is a little different from the ones I read about in your column and so I'm writing, hoping you can tell me how to solve it. Mother isn't willing for me to have friends or fun. In the afternoons when my girl friends call up and ask me to go skating or to a movie I say wait a minute until I ask mother. She always tells me to say, 'I'm sorry but I don't feel like going today.' I tell them this lie so much I almost believe it myself. She's afraid we'll meet the boys.

What I can't make out is that she sits up and entertains me by the hour telling me what good times she had when she was a girl. How can she be so cruel to a daughter. Of course I'm less and unhappy and can't get on with anything and when I cry she scolds me and says I'm old enough to settle down. I suppose I should get myself a cat and stay at home the rest of my life."

None so blind as those who will not see. Put at the head of the list is the mother who refuses to see that prohibitions and polices are poor policies for protecting adolescent girls. Why cannot these parents look around and observe that the young girls who are best are those whose mothers provide them with home fun, help them make friends of both sexes and start them off with a safe, sane, well chaperoned social life that centers around the family living room?

Emergencies Calmly

What a sense of security it gives you—when someone's sick or accidents happen—to have authoritative nursing information right at hand. What to do to follow his orders efficiently?

Does Dad collapse on a scorching day? It may be heat prostration. If so, he will be covered with cold perspiration, have an anxious look, breathe rapidly.

Send for the doctor, put your patient to bed and apply external heat to his feet. If pulse is weak, give a stimulant.

You know that baby has colic by his long, loud cry, his clenched fists, drawn-up knees, rigid abdomen. One simple effective treatment is to place him on his stomach on a well-covered hot water bottle.

A rusty nail in Junior's foot? Always wise to call the doctor but meantime cleanse the wound thoroughly with soap and water, apply peroxide. Then soak foot in a hot, strong epsom salts solution.

Correct nursing technique is really simple, you'll find—and what a lot of worry, extra steps it saves you!

In our 40-page booklet, "Practical Instruction for the Home Nurse," a registered nurse gives complete instructions for looking after patients at home. Explains proper care for pregnancy, the new baby. Tells how to recognize, nurse contagious illnesses, what to do for post-operative patients, how to meet emergencies.

MY DAY Adult Education Program Interests First Lady

By Eleanor Roosevelt.

HYDE PARK, N. Y.—I am afraid that in all the economy and the changes which are coming in the various plans for the WPA, the adult education program in which I have been very much interested, may suffer. I am interested in the whole program which includes, of course, an opportunity for adults to learn English, to have courses in citizenship, and history, and even, in some cases, to learn some handicrafts.

I noticed in Sunday's papers, however, that in New York City the whole program will be administered through the schools, and this seems to create a good deal of anxiety about the workers' education program. This particular program has been carried on with an advisory committee on which labor unions have had representation and, when they themselves have been carrying on an educational program, they have been able to increase their services with help from WPA teachers.

As I understand the plan for New York City, at least, this help would no longer be available and workers wishing to take courses would have to take such courses as are offered through the school organization. These courses may or may not have special bearing on the subjects in which they are interested.

Of course, English and economics might well be included in any course for adults, but the history of the labor movement would undoubtedly not be included. Some other subjects would be treated differently if the student body was entirely composed of workers, or there were a mixed group of people with varied interests.

Then, the question of citizenship training is becoming almost an obsession with me. I have come across one or two such sad stories about people who have been in this country many years, have helped to develop it, and now are thrown off WPA because they are not citizens. Yet no one ever told them how to get their papers, or pointed out the desirability of becoming a citizen.

One particularly sad case came to light the other day, in a letter from the young minister who is doing so much to help people in Scotts Run, W. Va. One of his best helpers was informed that he could no longer be on WPA because he was not a citizen, though he had lived over 30 years in this country, and all his children were born here. He applied for local relief, but, unfortunately for him, when work was steady and wages were good, he had bought his little home. Now his son and daughter, also out of work, had come to live with him. As long as he owned the little house, however, neither he nor his son could get relief. Finally, surplus commodities gave him a pound or so of beans, and he went home and hanged himself in his own little garden. Curious world, isn't it?

My mother-in-law had distinguished guests for luncheon today and I almost missed an appointment with three gentlemen who came to talk about "The Open Road," and organization which has been taking people on inexpensive trips to various parts of the world and which now contemplates a much more interesting piece of work.

Physicians all know how difficult it is to persuade patients to seek proper medical treatment early enough in the course of such illnesses as pulmonary tuberculosis, diabetes, nephritis, arteriosclerosis and even cancer, to check or modify the progress or the severity of the disease as effectually as timely treatment can. It seems to be human nature to gamble against the chance that the comparatively mild impairment of health in the early stage of such illness is serious enough to warrant thorough medical investigation and rigorous adherence to the regimen prescribed by the physician. Then, too, there is always a nostrum or two the victim wishes to try.

If patients in the incipient stage of the common organic diseases so recklessly procrastinate, it is perhaps not so remarkable that people (I do not say patients as yet) with the unlabeled manifestations of nutritional deficiency, generally drift along without the slightest endeavor to do anything to correct the deficiency, until they develop definite symptoms which, in their opinion, call for remedial measures of one kind or another.

I have observed this human trait at first hand in many instances. People who have no particular complaint, yet are unquestionably below par in health, functional performance, tone or vitality, will very often make a brave start on a corrective regimen which promises to build up vitality for them, and after a week or two drop it or just forget it. This is understandable when the corrective regimen demands active attention on the part

Stimulate Scalp Circulation With Exercise

By Ida Jean Kain.

What it takes to have beautiful hair is elbow grease, applied daily! All you have to do is brush your hair for five minutes a day, keep it scrupulously clean, and furnish your scalp with a good, healthy circulation.

Those are the rules laid down by an authority on this intensely interesting subject, and she is convinced that if a woman will follow them, there is practically no limit to the improvement to be made in the hair. She even knows of instances in which hair that was given regular care lost its gray tones and changed back to its natural color!

That is not meant as a promise that you can do the same thing. It just goes to show what miracles can be worked. Very often the hair seems to get along with scant attention, until some unusual strain is placed on the health and nervous system, such as an illness or the arrival of the baby. Then, suddenly the hair will turn into a dry, lifeless, unruly mass. Sometimes it falls out in chunks. (This may not happen until three or four months after recuperation.) The best preventive of such a condition is the constant, already mentioned, remedial steps should be begun just as soon as the patient is able.

While still in bed you can begin massage to stimulate the circulation. There is an excellent one: Place both hands on the head just above the ears and press and release in a kneading action, lifting and loosening the scalp. Then lock the hands on top of the head, with elbows straight out at the sides and without raising the shoulders, draw the hands down the back of the head, letting the chin fall forward on the chest, and repeat the performance, circling first in one direction, then the other.

Brushing is always important and especially so during pregnancy and following the arrival of the baby. Wield the brush up and out, first pressing the bristles down on the scalp, then turning the brush slightly outward in the upstroke. Your brush should have long, flexible bristles which will stimulate the circulation without injuring the scalp. If your hair is too oily, a tonic with a slight percentage of alcohol is beneficial and if your scalp is too dry, use a tonic with an oil component.

Circulation is the big factor in healthy, lustrous hair and this authority firmly believes in a little exercise—if not to keep your figure supple, then for the good of your hair! After an illness, your permission before attempting any exercise, but when you do start, here is a suggestion you will like: Sit on the floor, knees flexed, and feet drawn up close to the buttocks. Now, slowly rock backward, trying to lower one vertebrae at a time to the floor, until your back is flat on the floor, and knees are still flexed and hands clasped around them. This spine stretcher sends a flow of circulation to your scalp. The good of the exercise is in the slow lowering of the spine to the floor. Don't try for speed. As you become more adept, you can get an extra benefit by separating the flexed knees after you have rocked backward and dropping them on the floor just above the shoulders.

After an illness, your permission before attempting any exercise, but when you do start, here is a suggestion you will like: Sit on the floor, knees flexed, and feet drawn up close to the buttocks. Now, slowly rock backward, trying to lower one vertebrae at a time to the floor, until your back is flat on the floor, and knees are still flexed and hands clasped around them. This spine stretcher sends a flow of circulation to your scalp. The good of the exercise is in the slow lowering of the spine to the floor. Don't try for speed. As you become more adept, you can get an extra benefit by separating the flexed knees after you have rocked backward and dropping them on the floor just above the shoulders.

Brushing is always important and especially so during pregnancy and following the arrival of the baby. Wield the brush up and out, first pressing the bristles down on the scalp, then turning the brush slightly outward in the upstroke. Your brush should have long, flexible bristles which will stimulate the circulation without injuring the scalp. If your hair is too oily, a tonic with a slight percentage of alcohol is beneficial and if your scalp is too dry, use a tonic with an oil component.

Circulation is the big factor in healthy, lustrous hair and this authority firmly believes in a little exercise—if not to keep your figure supple, then for the good of your hair! Unpretentious Mood Achieved In Cottage

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

All of us are guilty sometimes—of falling over backward to do something the hard way when it might have been much simpler if we'd gone at it more simply. The charm of a direct unpretentious mood for a cottage impressed me recently when I visited a blithe little house where lived an informal young couple who regarded comfort and gay good times as the theme for their decorations.

TO A FARE-YE-WELL.

And so the entire house was painted white, including woodwork as well as walls. Then they bought light green texture-weave rugs for living room and dining room. Curtains were plain white voile made double Dutch sash style. The furniture they bought was all a simple unfinished modern which they finished with clear shellac, then sanded and waxed to a fare-ye-well.

The upholstered pieces they slip-covered in a toile de Jouy print in green on a white ground—it was unexpected but interesting and entirely suitable with the modern furniture. Lamp bases and accessories were all in bottle green glass and copper. That's really all there is to the room, but its cool clean looking simplicity gives it a freshness and restful uncomplicated air.

The main bedroom has green and white rag rugs, white painted furniture and spreads, quilts, chairs and curtains in a garden flowered chintz on a white ground. The guest room has white painted furniture and white shaggy string rugs with curtains, spread and dressing table skirt of yellow gingham. Simple rooms, both of them, but with charm and an amiable livability. The fun of the whole place was that it cost so little; the only important investments were the rugs for living room and dining room.

For Good Iced Coffee, One Needs Good Hot Coffee

By SALLY SAVER.

It seems rather odd that we of the south who like our drinks icy cold, have been slow taking to iced coffee, for the summer. But it is true that while our friends in other sections have been enjoying this delightful beverage iced for quite a long while, it is only in the last few years that we have taken iced coffee seriously.

This week is National Iced Coffee week and you are asked to celebrate it, not by making a speech or listening to one, but simply by treating yourself to a well-made glass of iced coffee, morning, noon or night, as it pleases yourself.

Iced coffee isn't always well-made, any more than is hot coffee. Critics have been heard to remark that relatively few persons make good coffee. For good iced coffee one needs good hot coffee, and it should be made double strength when it is to be iced. Two heaping tablespoons of coffee to a measuring cup of water is the suggested strength for iced coffee. Then pour the hot, freshly made coffee over ice cubes or cracked ice in tall glasses. Serve with fine granulated or powdered sugar, and plenty of cream.

If you are having a few friends to luncheon try this for a simple menu to be served on one plate: Tomato stuffed with shrimp or Tuna salad

Potato chips

Sandwiches with fruit filling

Green and ripe olives

Iced coffee

The fruit sandwich filling is made:

1 cup walnut meats

1 cup raisins

1-2 cup currant jelly

2 tablespoons orange juice

Grind nuts, raisins and dates. Break up jelly with fork; add to ground nuts and mix well. Add orange juice and if needed, makes two cups filling. Use on light and dark bread, to give contrast to luncheon plate.

A fruit plate which, with iced coffee, makes a warm day treat is this:

Combination Fruit Plate.

4 thin wedges sweet red-skinned apple (unpeeled)

4 half slices peeled orange

1 ripe banana, sliced

Salad greens

Berries

Cut unpeeled apple lengthwise into thin wedges. Slice a peeled orange crosswise and cut slices in halves. Arrange three rows of fruit, side by side, on a salad plate, using sliced bananas for the two outside rows. For one end of the center row, use the four apple wedges, placed so they overlap with the red skin toward the outside. Use the red skin toward the outside for the other end of the center row, placed so they overlap, the curved side of the slice toward the outside. Garnish the center with greens and berries. Serve with a sweet or tart dressing. This makes one large individual serving.

Opposing Bidder Asks a Question

By Harold Sharpsteen.

"Dear Mr. Sharpsteen:

"In all examples you have given illustrations first—round asking bids and their responses, opposing bidders have always remained politely silent. What happens when opponents double the asking bid for penalties? Must the doubled side run for cover in its agreed suit?"

"J. E. R. Moline, III."

Answer: Opponents may as well remain politely silent, as far as blocking information between the asking bidder and partner. As a matter of fact, responses to asking bids are made easier when opponents attempt to interfere. Take the following example:

South: 1 heart, 4 clubs (x).

West: Pass, double.

North: 3 hearts (?).

East: Pass.

Following West's double of South's asking bid (x) of four clubs, North may:

(1) Sign off by simply passing, instead of bidding the agreed suit, had West passed.

(2) West's double makes it unnecessary for North to jump in the agreed suit to show a "fit" for clubs and the heart ace.

(3) Because of the double, North is now able to show a "fit" for clubs, lacking outside aces, by simply redoubling North's double.

MY LOVE IS WAITING

Dorian Goes Home, Tells Her Mother And Father About Her Engagement

By Margaret Gorman Nichols

INSTALLMENT XXIV.

Dorian said, "Don't please. It has to be this way now!" Today Dorian had to wait for Bart in the crowded hotel lobby. She took a conspicuous chair so that he would see her when he came in. But she was glad that he was detained, glad for a few minutes alone with herself. She glanced around—and suddenly all the faces were Miles' face and all had his fine head of black hair. "And every day he is closer. I haven't tried to bring him closer. Miles, go away! Stop haunting me. Pat was wrong, but . . ."

When she saw Bart, she thought, "I should be proud and flattered. But I'm not. I can't think of anything except the things I must do, the things that are expected of me."

At luncheon she told him about Pat.

He smiled and said, "It sounds a little crazy to me." "It is, I guess. She and Terry always will be a little crazy. They won't be a conventional married pair. But they're going to be awfully happy—with each other." With each other—because they're from the same world and they understand each other and they like the same things and the same people. . . . Because they have everything in common.

A little later he said, "So you're leaving me tonight to go home." Pat had said, "If you stay away from him a week, you won't be in love with him."

"Yes." "We'll have an early dinner and I'll take you to your train. You look tired, darling. Is there anything I can do?"

She smiled. "About my family, you mean. No. I'll break it to them gently. You'll be down?" "Next week-end." How he dreaded it. . . .

At a little past seven in the cold crowded station they turned to each other to say good-bye. Why had she no regrets at leaving him? Why was she even a little glad to escape the Pelhams temporarily and the possibility of seeing again the hostile faces that had been at the Pelham apartment a few nights ago? No regret and no tears at saying good-bye to the man she was going to marry in less than three weeks. . . .

Bart said kindly, "It's been almost too much for you, hasn't it? Get a good rest, dear." There were shadows beneath her eyes. She looked thinner. He put his arms around her and kissed her. "I'll miss you terribly. I love you. Write . . ."

She said, "Yes," and moved away from him, following the red cap, clasping the railing because her tears would not let her see. Tears, but not tears of regret. . . . When Bart came out of the station, he knew he had the look of a man pleased with himself. And he had always despised men who were pleased with themselves.

Six tiresome hours while her thoughts scattered. . . . When the conductor shouted, "Parkton! Next stop Parkton!" she sat up with a start.

When she stepped from the train she went into her mother's arms, and then into her father's. Tall, deep-voiced Janet Lane, wearing a dark coat over a print dress and a small dark hat over short dark hair, cried, "Darling, it's been so long! How are you? Let me look at you. . . ."

Big, fair Thomas Lane chuckled. "It's my turn, dear." He tilted Dorian's chin and looked into her face. "You look tired. Never saw a woman go away on a trip that she didn't come home looking all worn out."

"How are you, Dad?"

"Never better."

Dorian turned to her mother. "How is Ted? Where is he?" Janet said, "In bed. He wanted to come but he couldn't stay awake. Have you had dinner? Oh, there's so much I want you to tell me, darling! We have the new car. . . ."

"And Ted's learning to drive."

Thomas Lane said, chuckling. "It won't be new long."

While they drove through town, her mother talked. Tommy Saunders had taken a week of his vacation and gone, she had heard to Washington. She, Janet, had been selected as a representative to a convention to Chicago in June. Cousin Jenny's blood pressure was much worse and Sue Peel had been rushed to the hospital to have her appendix out. More town gossip. . . .

At last the shiny new car stopped before the brown cottage on a quiet dark street lined with trees.

"Guess it looks sort of strange to you," her father said. "It looks good to me, Dad."

He laughed. "Ah, it always will! Run along in. I'll bring in your baggage."

In the large shabby living room where a fire burned low in the brick fireplace she took the dark hat from her aching head, took off her coat and gloves. Her mother had said, "I'm going to fix something to eat, dear. Some coffee and sandwiches. Then we'll talk. Her mother so eager to know about the cruise. Her father so glad to have her home again."

He took her bags upstairs and when he came down again and came into the living room, he stopped still and went pale. He was staring at the diamond on her left hand. . . .

Their eyes met as they had always met—with faith and understanding.

"Is it true, Dorian?" "Yes, Dad. I hadn't intended to shock you. I was going to tell you tonight."

"Wait until your mother comes in."

He smiled kindly and took her hand and held it as her mother came in with a tray of sandwiches and coffee and put it on the small table before the divan.

"Eat something," her father said. Janet sat opposite in a faded green chair and smiled with great satisfaction. "You've seen more of the world than any girl around here has. No one I know so proud of you. I knew it could be done if you could just get away and meet the right kind of men. . . ."

Thomas Lane said good-humoredly, "Let the child eat, dear. These sandwiches you made probably taste better to her than all the fancy meals she had on the ship put together."

Odd that her mother had not noticed the ring. "We got one of your cards only yesterday," Janet said. "Ted, of course, has taken off all the stamps. He wants to know the difference between riding a camel and riding a horse. Were the people on the ship nice? Were your clothes all right? After you left I talked with Mrs. Blakely and she said you didn't need many light things. I was afraid you weren't warm enough."

"My clothes were fine," Dorian said. "You really don't need as many as you think. I almost lived in my tailored suit and walking shoes."

"Do you want anything else to eat?"

"No, nothing." She looked at her father, loving him intensely then. Then she looked across the room at her mother and answered one question in her excited eyes.

"Mother, I'm engaged."

she said. "I'm going to marry a man I met on the cruise."

Mrs. Lane stared. Dorian's father said, "Take your time, honey, and tell us all about it."

Dorian said, "His name is Bart Waring. He lives in New York. He's about 10 years older than I am and very successful. That's why I didn't come home right away. He wanted me to stay. I stayed with his friends. He's coming down next week-end to meet you. And we're going to be married in about three weeks."

She held out her hand for her mother to see the ring. Then she said, "I know it's a shock. I suppose it always is when the man is a complete stranger. But I know you'll like him and approve of him. He's wonderful, really."

Her mother did not speak.

Her father asked quietly, "Do you love him? Will you—will you fit into each other's lives? You haven't known him very long. Don't you think it would be wiser . . ."

"He doesn't want us to wait, Dad." Her voice was quiet but her heart was pounding. "We're going to be married in the apartment of my friends in New York, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Pelham. There are going to be only a few people. My family and his close friends. He wants it that way. I did some shopping while I was there so there isn't a great deal to do."

Janet cried, "But, Thomas, it's—it's wonderful!" Getting up, she came to the divan, sat down, took Dorian's hand and looked at the dazzling diamond. "It's beautiful! Tell us more about him. What is his name again? When did it happen? New York in three weeks! Good heavens. . . ."

Her father rose. "I guess you and your mother can talk this out, Dorian."

She thought, "He's hurt. He knows, without knowing Bart, that Bart doesn't want anything of my family—except me."

"Don't go, Dad."

He put his hand on her shoulder. "It's late. Anything you and your mother decide will be all right with me."

He grinned down at her and touched her hair with affection. "You know, I've always thought you were a pretty clear-headed kid, don't you?"

She wanted to say, "You mean you don't think I'm clear-headed about this, don't you? Why? How do you know?"

When he left, her mother said, "Let me see your ring again. It's the most gorgeous. . . . But start at the beginning? It's too wonderful! It's what I've hoped and dreamed for you—to get out of this horrible little town!"

She told her mother about everything and every one—every one except Miles. . . .

After a long time Dorian glanced at her watch. It was 3 o'clock.

Her mother asked, "Tired, aren't you? We'll talk more about it tomorrow. Darling, I'm so proud of you. I knew it could be done if you could just get away and meet the right kind of men. . . ."

Dorian straightened. "Mother, you wouldn't be as pleased about it, about my marrying a man you've never seen, if he weren't a successful man, would you?"

Her mother said flatly, "I think you've shown very good sense, very good judgment in this. He sounds splendid. You don't think I'd want you to marry a man just because he's successful, do you? I want my little girl to be happy. Now you run along to bed."

Dorian arose, aching. "I'd like to rest for a few days. I don't want any one to know just yet."

Her mother looked disappointed. Dorian said, "You get very little sleep on ships, and the land tours are strenuous. I don't want the phone ringing and people asking questions—yet."

"Of course. I understand, dear." They went up the steps together and at the door of her room her mother embraced her and kissed her and said again, "I'm so proud of you. Of course, I've always dreamed of your being married here in your own church. But we'll do what Bart wants. And he doesn't mind your father, dear. He's hopelessly old-fashioned."

Continued Tomorrow.

Ukah answered grimly. "The chain is locked. Go quickly to the guard. At his belt he will have a key." D'Arnot obeyed swiftly. The elephant was released, but the delay had cost. The Thorsians, having heard the guard's stifled cry, streamed from the barracks!

NORRIS REFUSES COMPROMISE ON TVA BOND ISSUE

Offer Would Allow Authority $45,000,000 To Finance Power Firms' Properties by Friday.

WASHINGTON, June 27.—(AP)—Senator Norris, Independent, Nebraska, turned a deaf ear today to a compromise offer which would permit the Tennessee Valley Authority to issue $45,000,000 in bonds to finance purchase of Tennessee Electric Power Company properties before Friday's deadline.

Chairman May, Democrat, Kentucky, of house conferees, sent word of the offer to Norris, spokesman for senate conferees. It was made by representatives of the public power board of Chattanooga, Tenn., one of the principal cities associated with the federal purchase in the proposed purchase.

May said TVA needed but $45,000,000 to finance its part of the $78,600,000 contract. He said if Norris would agree to reduce the senate's $100,000,000 proposal to $45,000,000, he would agree to strip house legislation of other restrictive provisions, including one to confine TVA to the Tennessee watershed.

Norris said $45,000,000 would not meet rehabilitation and other TVA needs in connection with the acquisition of the properties and added he would not call another conference to consider the suggestion.

TVA AIDS MEMPHIS TO BUY POWER FIRM
MEMPHIS, Tenn., June 27.—(AP)—The TVA today gained a market for an estimated $1,100,000 of power a year when the city of Memphis, with TVA aid, completed the purchase of Memphis Power & Light Company and took over the system.

The city's power division experts count on paying TVA $1,100,000 for 325,000 kilowatt hours during the first year and reselling it to Memphis' 62,000 electric consumers for $4,172,384. Exchange of the $1,360,000 purchase price for M. P. & L.'s electric and gas systems was accomplished with little fanfare in the city council chamber. The TVA contributed $2,110,000 of the price and received part of the transmission lines and other facilities.

COLUMBUS CONSIDERS SCHOOL FINANCE BONDS
COLUMBUS, Ga., June 27.—(AP)—Columbus city commissioners have called a recess meeting for Friday morning to consider floating a $50,000 loan to pay school teachers and finance other municipal services.

Approximately $20,000 is needed to meet in full the $31,000 teacher pay roll due July 1, the commissioners have been informed.

Officials said the city would be unable to meet teacher pay rolls after July 1 unless state funds are made available. City borrowing is limited to $79,000, of which $25,000 already has been used.

Youngster Allegedly Was Sold for $50

Baby Tonita Estelle, who, it is charged, was sold for $50, is totally unaware that Dr. John Tippie, Cleveland, has surrendered to authorities to face charges of placing the month-old infant in a Pittsburgh home without consent of the courts.

Norris said $45,000,000 would not meet rehabilitation and other TVA needs in connection with the acquisition of the properties and added he would not call another conference to consider the suggestion.

WINDSOR EXPECTED HOME IN AUTUMN

Return of Duke and Wife To England Seen; May Visit U. S. Next Year.

LONDON, June 27.—(AP)—An autumn home-coming for the Duke of Windsor and his American-born Duchess was confidently predicted tonight in large black type by the Evening Standard.

For two and a half years now its owner, Lord Beaverbrook, has let scarcely a week go by without demanding that former King Edward VIII come back and bring his wife.

The Standard devoted the entire top half of its front page to the story that the Duke of Windsor, having abandoned his demand that his Duchess be made "her royal highness"—the title given royal duchesses—would take up residence with her here in October.

The Standard also said it was probable the Windsors would visit the United States next year. In Paris, where the Windsors were packing up for a trip to the Mediterranean and a summer of Riviera fun, the Duke's spokesman was carefully non-committal.

"The Duke and Duchess have not yet made their plans for the autumn," he said.

For a long time it has been open season on guessing when the Windsors would return to England. Nevertheless, there was good reason to believe Lord Beaverbrook might have the inside track.

He has long been a warm friend and even warmer champion of the former King.

There was reported to be less objection in influential British quarters to the Duke's return to England now that King George has so firmly established his own popularity through his American tour.

For the same reason it was believed a visit by the Windsors to the United States would arouse less opposition here now than when the trip was planned last year.

FARMERS' GARDENS WORTH $7,000,000
Georgia's Climate Makes Better Prices Possible.

Approximately 200,000 farms in Georgia maintained home gardens valued at $7,000,000, Professor R. L. Keener, of the University of Georgia horticulture department reported yesterday.

"Georgia is blessed with climatic conditions which permit the growing of crops at seasons when they cannot be grown in other truck-growing sections," Keener said.

"This reduces competition and enables Georgia growers to get better prices for their products."

The instructor urged Georgia planters to grow more garden seed, adding there had been a noticeable tendency toward such practice recently.

The peninsula closes Danzig bay opposite the Polish port of Gdynia where a Polish naval base is located.

A. SIDNEY CAMP WILL SEEK POST
Newman Attorney Announces for Office of Late Representative Owen.

A. Sidney Camp, Newman attorney and runner-up in the last Democratic primary, yesterday announced he would seek the office of the late Representative E. M. Owen, of Griffin, in the fourth congressional district.

A native of Covetta county, Camp has practiced law at Newman since 1915. He is a veteran of the World War and has been active in civic and political affairs of his district. Since 1934, he has been an assistant United States attorney for the northern district of Georgia.

Camp said he would "fight for the equality of the Georgia farmer with those of the west and middle west in farm benefits and acreage allotments, for equality rather than discrimination in freight rates; for a decrease rather than an increase in taxation."

Candidates were advised to file notice with the secretary of state at once. Attorney General Ellis Arnall said the law requires all candidates for national and state offices to file notices with the secretary of state at least 30 days before an election. Governor Rivers has indicated he will set the election date for August 1.

TELEPHONE BOOKS ISSUED WITH NO STRINGS ATTACHED

Another "missing link" mystery had Atlanta telephone users guessing yesterday with no help volunteered by officials of the telephone company except that a statement would be forthcoming shortly—probably today.

For one yet—unexplained reason, the new telephone books put in their appearance without the customary loop of string—ordinarily as closely associated with them as ham with eggs or vice versa.

Close inspection revealed that the holes had been in the upper left-hand corner as usual and that most of the customers still had a tack stuck in the wall. But the "link" was definitely missing.
